THE SUNDAY AMERICAN'S CIRCULATION FOR SEPTEMBER

September 7	106,908
September 14	106,519
September 21	106,246
September 28	116,456
October 5	120,000

The NET PAID CIRCULATION OF THE Sunday American IS NOW MORE THAN THE COMBINED NET PAID CIRCULATION OF The Atlanta Sunday Constitution and Atlanta Sunday Journal.

To establish a Sunday newspaper with a NET PAID CIRCULATION OF OVER 100,000 IN SIX MONTHS, a net paid circulation of more than its two competitors in the same field, is the most remarkable journalistic achievement of the age.

GROWTH OF A GREAT EVENING NEWSPAPER

The figures below should be carefully studied by the business men and advertisers of Atlanta. They show the steadily increasing growth of THE GEORGIAN. They are the figures sworn to in the report to the United States Government, and INCLUDE IN ADDITION TO THE NUMBER PAID FOR, some papers that are sent to advertisers, to advertising agencies throughout the United States, charitable and public institutions, samples, files, employees, etc.:

April Circulation	37,488
May Circulation	44,203
June Circulation	46,998
July Circulation	49,685
August Circulation	72,351
September Circulation	62,331

Neither the evening Journal nor The Constitution gives circulation figures by days or months, so no comparison can be made between The Georgian's figures and figures of The Journal and The Constitution.

The net paid circulations of the evening Journal and The Constitution, taken from their report to the Government, show:

Evening Journal, average for six months	53,558
The Constitution, average for six months	42,686

The Georgian's marvelous growth in popularity is shown by comparing the circulation of The Georgian during the month of April and the month of September, 1913:

The Georgian's average total circulation for April	37,488
The Georgian's average total circulation for Sept.	62,331

CIRCULATION NEARLY DOUBLED IN SIX MONTHS

WANDERLIST OF BREAKS UP GASSE-DE-VALE

She Asks Divorce; He Answers
Her "Nomadic Migrations" Killed Love's Dream.

HUSBAND RESTLES TOURS Beautiful but Desires Helmslet's Pregnancies Led Her to Six Towns in Two Years.

The story of a "migratory" wife, who, "receiving a change of scenery," as alleged, left her husband periodically without warning and went from place to place over the country, was aired in Judge Helmslet's division of the Superior Court Saturday afternoon in the divorce and alimony suit of Mrs. Helena Gossett against Robert A. Gossett, local agent of the Texas Oil Mill.

As a result of the hearing Judge Helmslet rendered a decision requiring the defendant, for the second time, to pay the fee of the plaintiff's attorney in addition to $50 per month alimony.

Mrs. Gossett brought suit for divorce last year, but later withdrew it with the provision that defendant should pay her attorney's fees. This Mr. Gossett did, and the two lived together again for several days. In May of this year Mrs. Gossett filed a second suit for divorce.

In the answer to his wife's petition the defendant gave a graphic description of her alleged "nomadic migrations." Her wanderings, it is alleged, during the past two years, led her first to Rock, S. C., thence to Jacksonville, Fla., back to South Carolina, thence to Los Angeles, Cal., from there to Helen, Fla., and finally back home on the husband's promise to break up housekeeping, rent rooms and board.

The defendant states in closing his plea that he "loved his wife and still loves her," that he has tried every device he could to please her, but that she "has not been satisfied." Mrs. Gossett is described as being a beautiful woman.

Fried Oysters Cost Howard $300 Pearl

Georgia Congressman Had Blue Points Cooked—Now He's Learning to Eat 'Em Raw.

If you are a good friend, Congressman William Ashley Howard, who is home for a few days, will show you a big pearl, as big as a grain of corn, that he found in an oyster in the House restaurant the other day in Washington. And he will tell you how it happened.

The oysters were excellent in the restaurant that day, and the negro waiter, knowing the Georgia man's tastes, came toward him with a grin on his face.

"Nice oysters, Mr. Howard," he announced. "Nice oysters, fried brown, just as Mr. Howard likes. But just because he insisted on the cooking, he lost his pearl. There it was in the very first oyster, but the heat had ruined it. It is estimated that it is worth $300."

"Just my luck," says Mr. Howard. "Now I am learning to eat 'em raw."

Stanley Waterloo, Noted Writer, Dead

Author Is Taken Ill With Pneumonia As He Talked With Ole Rea.

CHICAGO, Oct. 11.—Stanley Waterloo, 67, for more than 40 years active in literature, big political movement and in journalism, died here tonight as a result of an attack of pneumonia suffered several days ago.

He was taken ill Wednesday evening while seated at the Chicago Press club. He is estimated that he had been writing for a number of days in his list of members Eugene F. James, Whitcomb Riley, Ole Rea, Will Vinchard and Charles G. Seymore.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—The House today by a vote of 18 to 121 declined to appropriate $1,000 for an associate for Vice President Marshall.

The House accepted the Senate plan to abolish the Commerce Court, but retained the four judges of the court on the ground of necessity.

MOB PURSUES CHAUFFEUR WHO KILLS DOWN GIRL

Which Sees Peachtree Street Accident.

DRIVER ESCAPES BY RUDE Victim Caught by Fender, Car Has To Be Rolled Back Off Body.

Hundreds of persons who saw an automobile owned by Otto H. Von Dingelhoff, an attorney in the Candler Building, run down a young woman in front of the Grand Theater building late Saturday afternoon, formed themselves into a mob and threatened to lynch the chauffeur.

After being followed to the home of the victim, the driver broke from the crowd, ran into the building and escaped through the rear entrance, while a woman blocked the pursuit of the mob at the front door.

Caught by Fender.
Miss Hughes was walking north on Peachtree street when the accident occurred. As she stepped from the curb the right fender of the automobile, which was approaching from behind, caught her dress and, swinging her bodily forward, threw her down in front of the machine.

The car was brought to a halt over the body of the young woman and had to be rolled back before she could be picked up.

Police officers going home from work witnessed the accident and hastened to the scene. As soon as the girl was picked up a mob gathered about the chauffeur, George J. Weaver, a traveling salesman for the Olive Traveler Company, No. 14 Auburn avenue, sprang into the machine, which contained but the one person, and clutched the chauffeur around the neck, declaring that he would hold him for the police. Other persons numbered into the machine and were generally attacked upon the man was imprisoned.

The chauffeur pleaded with his captors to be permitted to telephone to his employer. While this was being done an automobile driven by W. A. Seaman, who has office in the Candler Building, came up and took Miss Hughes to her home at No. 11 West Oak street.

Crowd Wants Life.
When released from the car she was surrounded by a great crowd, from which murmurs of "lynch him" and "kill him" were heard. The crowd addressed the chauffeur, declaring that he should be turned over into their hands.

A sharp struggle ensued between Weaver and the chauffeur, by which the latter secured his release and plunged up the short flight of steps into the apartment building. Several of the mob's assailants ran after him, but were halted by Mrs. D. E. McLaw, proprietor, who stood in the doorway and defied them to enter her home.

Escapes Through Rear.
The chauffeur escaped through the rear entrance to the building, while the cries of the mob in front rose to a high pitch. To policemen, who arrived on the scene, Dingelhoff promised that he would deliver his driver at the police station as soon as he could find him.

According to witnesses the car was moving at a high rate of speed. Miss Hughes, at her home later, declared that the windshield of the machine was in a position that it was impossible for the driver to have seen her. It was also stated that the man kept his seat in the car while policemen pushed it back off of the girl's body.

When the young woman was taken to her home, Father Basier, of Marist College, was summoned. Miss Carver, daughter of a prominent citizen, who was injured by the car, also was sent for.

Miss Hughes is about 17 years old and very pretty.

MISS KATIE HOLSTON, Atlanta girl who kept secret that the mob was fact for four months.

Keeps Her Marriage Secret Four Months

Miss Katie Holston, who lives at No. 39 Cherokee avenue, has been a very happy young woman for four months. Her friends noticed it, but, knowing her for the most discreet person alive, they thought nothing of her excessive exuberance.

Therefore they were very much surprised yesterday when she could keep the secret no longer and announced that she had been married all this time.

Miss Holston has been in America for a month, visiting her sister, Mrs. J. Williams, and it was there she told all about her new husband, a young business man of Dawson, who was married in Atlanta August 10 by the Rev. G. L. Hanson. Only four intimate friends were present, and they were pledged to secrecy.

The new found wife to Atlanta almost immediately. Here Miss Holston was popular. In Atlanta she lived with her uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Palford. Hereafter she will live in Albany.

The first call of the Vulturino was, "We are on fire and need to be abandoned ship. Can hold on for a while. S. O. S."

The S. O. S. call was heard by the Carmania, 78 miles away, and by other ships within the zone and answered.

It was sent out about 8 o'clock Thursday morning. The Carmania made 20 miles an hour through the storm and was there at noon.

The Grosser Kurfirst and the Seydlitz, German tramp, reached her at 4 o'clock.

Seven other ships—La Touraine, Minneapolis, Rappahannock, Ozar, Narragansett, Devonian and Kronland—reached her by nighttime.

The passengers were taken off and more than 500 lives saved on Friday. It was possible only through the use of wireless.

Special cable to the American.
LONDON, Oct. 11.—One hundred and thirty-six persons lost their lives when the steamship Vulturino, of the Transatlantic Line, was destroyed at sea on Friday, having been on fire 24 hours.

Ten steamships surrounded the Vulturino for sixteen hours while the fire raged at its height, but none of the rescue fleet was able to head an onslaught owing to the terrific storm.

The Vulturino sailed from Rotterdam for New York, via Halifax, on October 2. She carried 24 cabin passengers, 540 steerage and a crew of 23. Of the 567 known to have been on board, 121 have been reported saved by the ten vessels.

The greatest loss of life occurred when four of the Vulturino's six lifeboats were dashed to pieces against the side of the vessel a few moments after they were launched. Other lifeboats launched from the rescue ships were also crashed by the waves.

Early Friday morning a terrific explosion in the Vulturino's boiler room almost rent the vessel in half. When this occurred the passengers on the stricken ship believed they were doomed while the captains of the vessels which had rushed to the rescue sought a little chance of saving those on the burning ship.

Lifboats Launched.
Suddenly the sea calmed and the sea calmed considerably. Within a few moments a score of lifeboats had been launched from the vessels standing by and were rushing toward the stern of the Vulturino, where the passengers had gathered. They were hoisted against the rail.

When the Vulturino was abandoned Friday morning she was seen to be gradually sinking. Her position was then about 800 miles northeast of Cape Race and close to the spot where the Titanic sank sixteen months ago.

Many See Disaster.
Never before has such a disaster been witnessed by so many spectators.

The Philadelphia Athletics, by defeating the New York Giants yesterday, won their third world's championship in four years, while the Giants lost their third consecutive game to win the honor in baseball. The Athletics thus made a record, and the Giants tied one—that established in 1907, 1908 and 1909 by Detroit, which team lost three world's series in succession.

The campaign this year was short and sharp. The last time the Giants and Athletics met, rain and snow interrupted the series about halfway, and it was two weeks in finishing. This year the series began Tuesday and ended Saturday of the same week.

The special features of the play in the series of 1913 were the battles of the Athletics and the lack of effective pitching by the Giants, except in the case of Mathewson.

Bender pitched the first game, last night, and was opposed by Mathewson, who was speedily routed, the Athletics winning 6 to 4. In spite of a brief attack by the Giants on the Indian runner.

At Mathewson opposed Plank in the second game, who was the battle of Philadelphia. He pitched the greatest game of all his honorable career, blanketed the Athletics for ten innings, and started the rally that beat Eddie Plank in the last inning. The score was 2 to 0.

Terran was selected by McGraw to pitch the third game played in New York against Bush, a result for the Athletics. Bush pitched well, while Terran was driven from the mound in the early innings, the final score being 3 to 2, the lowest count of the series.

The fourth game was played Friday in Philadelphia, and this time McGraw started a youngster, Al Demaree, who was opposed by the veteran Bender. Demaree was knocked out, but Marquand stopped the scoring and the Giants nearly won the game by hard pounding of Bender in the closing innings. The score was 2 to 0.

Then came the finish and the sweeping victory in the series, when the Athletics won yesterday on the Christy Mathewson, whose work rendered futile by the warring of his mates and the grand pitching of Eddie Plank, who yielded only two hits. The score was 2 to 0.

Giants in Bad Condition.
A double score of 2 to 0 in five games shows that the Athletics out-pitched, out-fielded, out-batted and generally out-played their rivals at all points. Baker, Collins and Barry for the Athletics.

ers. Thus each Athletic drew about $2,600, and each Giant player $2,400. Atlanta baseball fans, as usual, were much interested in the big series. Remarkably good facilities were afforded them to keep closely in touch with the games. Writers of all kinds, including many of the distinguished "player scribers," furnished accounts to the papers.

"Player scribers" of "walkers" and electric scoreboards also portrayed the games, and there was no finish for 400 interested fan going without the latest news from the front.

For complete details of the latest game and of the series, see Sporting Sections.

He is suffering from a slight attack of neuralgia.

OPS FOR BATTLE OF THE LAZING ESSEL

tura. Huddled on the deck ocean home, a German tramp and a Standard Oil tank steamer which heard the Volturo "S. O. S." distress call by wireless, were several hundred persons, who, unsmiling of the being cold of the gale and the danger from the huge waves which crashed over the vessels remained on deck throughout the afternoon and night to watch the fire.

All during Thursday night search for the Volturo. The German steamer was kept steadily on the Volturo, while another plane from the vessel that surrounded the stricken ship. The cries of those on the Volturo were carried by the gale and the passengers on all of the other vessels could see the women and children huddled close to Volturo's aft, while the men were huddled over the bow.

That so many were rescued from the Volturo was due to the prompt action of the Captain Barr of the Carmaria. The wireless operator on the Carmaria picked up a faint "S. O. S." call shortly after noon on Thursday. The position of the Volturo was given and the following message was sent: "Some quick ship; after fear we are doomed."

Carmaria Rushes to Rescue. The Carmaria which was bound from New York October 4 for Liverpool, had Captain Barr of the Volturo had reported his vessel. The Carmaria was about 10 miles from the Volturo. Extra engines were started and the ship was proceeding on full steam and within a short time the Carmaria was within 5 miles under full power.

At 1 o'clock the lookout on the Carmaria sighted a black spot on the horizon and the Captain Barr was alerted. Captain Barr then attempted to reach the burning ship with lines shot from the bow of the Carmaria. Owing to the wind all of the shots went wide of the mark.

In the meantime the Carmaria wireless operator had been sending out calls to all vessels which happened to be in the vicinity of the trans-Atlantic track. Nine vessels answered these calls.

Soon after 5 o'clock the North German Lloyd liner Grosser Kurfuerst, which sailed from Bremen on October 4, was sighted. The Grosser Kurfuerst man in charge, after receiving a call up to the Volturo.

Others Steam to Aid. Following these, all at full steam, came the British liner, the Black Lion, which was being towed across the strait by the gale, came the La Touraine of the French line, which sailed from New York October 4 for Havre; the Minerva of the Atlantic Transport Line, which left New York October 4 for London; the Italian liner, the Libia; the Narragansett of the American line, which sailed from New York October 4 for Liverpool; the Volturo of Liverpool; the Kroomland of the Red Line, which left Bremen October 4 for New York.

Shortly before darkness closed in over the scene Captain Barr ordered his lifeboats manned and ordered all women and children who were carried to the water when they were hurried to the side of the Volturo and four of them were crushed like eggs. The other boats were made clear of the burning vessel and one was placed between the ship and the other by the Swedish.

Lines Can't Reach. It was then reported to the captain of the eleven vessels that any attempt to rescue by wireless. Captain Barr then brought the Carmaria close to the stern of the Volturo and the general lines at once, burning ship, but the gale was too strong and the waves were too high.

One line carried close to the rail and scores of eager hands reached out to clutch the line that meant safety. But when the line was fastened the ten vessels began a mad dash for the Volturo, which was carried to the other vessel.

By consent of the commanders of all of the vessels in the rescue fleet, Captain Barr was allowed to take command of the situation. He then decided that the ten vessels which formed the rescue fleet would form a "battle line" in a line about the Volturo. Then, under his command, the ten vessels began a mad dash for the Volturo, then a mass of flames

HOW THE RESCUE FLEET SAVED LIVES

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 11.—The report received here to-night by wireless from Captain Barr of the Carmaria, states that the Volturo was abandoned at sea October 10 at 1:30 a. m. when the vessel was in latitude 43° 21' and longitude 14° 33'.

Captain Barr gave the number of lives saved as follows: Carmaria, 11; La Touraine, 40; Narragansett, 30; Narragansett, 19; Car, 10; Kroomland, 20; Grosser Kurfuerst, 100; Redline, 20.

Over the night the captain kept up a conference by wireless. While numerous plans were suggested, each calling for a desperate attempt to reach the burning ship, it was decided that the only hope lay in the chance that the gale would abate and the outside men could reach the ship.

Confer by Wireless. Over the night the captain kept up a conference by wireless. While numerous plans were suggested, each calling for a desperate attempt to reach the burning ship, it was decided that the only hope lay in the chance that the gale would abate and the outside men could reach the ship.

Shortly before dawn the watchers on the vessel which formed the rescue fleet began to see an immense flame shoot up from about the middle of the Volturo. An instant later the fire broke out on all sides of the Volturo and the flames were seen to be burning on all sides of the vessel.

Passengers Work Pump. Up to this time the crew assisted by many of the male passengers had kept up a steady fight against the flames. For some time the steam pump had been used to flood the deck and when the heat in the fire room became unbearable the hand pumps were used to pump out the water of the passengers took their turn at an explosion. The latter were prevented from reaching the after-holds either fall or jump from this boat. Captain Barr believes that many of the lives were saved by the rolling of the Volturo. As the Volturo rolled, the flames were thrown from the deck and the passengers were able to get a better chance of being rescued.

Boas in Air. One cabin boy (FBI) he could see many bodies flying through the air following the explosion. He believed that many had been blown from the ship and he saw many of them as they fell into the sea. At the same time the searchlight from the Carmaria swept the horizon in the hope of seeing any bodies. Several bodies were seen to be falling into the sea, but none of these were rescued.

Hearst's SUNDAY AMERICAN, published in Atlanta, reached a total circulation of over 100,000 on August 24. Each Sunday following has shown a substantial increase. The first issue of THE SUNDAY AMERICAN was published on April 5, 1913. To establish a Sunday newspaper with over 100,000 net paid circulation in six months is an unparalleled achievement. The important thing in newspaper circulation is solid growth. The appended figures indicate an amazing record of newspaper growth of the right kind.

Attention is called to the third column in the following table, under the head "Variouly Distributed." The figures so given include papers distributed to advertising agencies throughout the United States, sent to hotels for files, to charitable and public institutions, to advertisers in the South, to employees, for files, for samples, etc. Such distribution is regarded as the best kind of circulation, although not classified as net.

Governor Slaton Personally Investigates and Verifies the Circulation of The Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American.

October 4th 1913.

At the request of the management of The Atlanta Georgian and The Sunday American, I personally examined on Friday afternoon their various circulation statements, in detail. This work required some time, but it was willingly given, because I regard these newspapers as enterprises of which all Georgia should be proud. The figures the papers furnish, under oath, to the postal authorities show a marvelous growth for the time The Georgian and Sunday American have been in Mr. Hearst's hands--particularly The Sunday American, which is only six months old.

These circulation figures I have checked up and verified in person. I have examined the sworn statements of the circulation manager and the cashier of The Georgian corporation, and cross questioned them in detail about the circulation figures. I believe the figures to be absolutely correct.

Purely from a business man's viewpoint, both The Georgian and The Sunday American, in points of quality and quantity of circulation, should be, and I have no doubt are, highly satisfactory and effective advertising mediums. Certainly they are most excellent newspapers, and should commend themselves to merchants for business purposes.

The fine circulation showings furnish me ample foundation for warm congratulations. I sincerely wish for Mr. Hearst and his Georgia newspapers the fullest measure of prosperity and success--both of which seem assured. I am persuaded this great publisher means to be consistently a firm and powerful friend of Atlanta, Georgia, and the whole South; and I well know his ability to do big things in a big way.

John W. Slaton.

Florida Rail Head Predicts Good Times

Speculation Rife in Jacksonville Over Seaboard Air Line's Projected Improvements.

JACKSONVILLE, Oct. 11.--There is much speculation in railroad circles here as to the character of improvements which are contemplated by the Seaboard Air Line Railroad for its May street properties.

Charles E. Capps, vice president and general manager of the road, who was here recently, announced that improvements were well under way, but that the officials were not yet ready to announce them.

From all reports received by the road, Mr. Capps believes the coming season will be one of the greatest Florida has ever enjoyed and he believes that the growth attained this coming winter will be small in comparison to what is coming every year from now on.

Finding of Prospector's Grave at Foot of Pine Parly Cleared Mystery.

PENDLETON, OREG., Oct. 11.--Deep in the fastness of the almost impassable mountain of the Seven Devils country, in Idaho, William Finley, a prospector, discovered that which clears up half of the mystery surrounding the disappearance six years ago of "gentleman Jack" Howland and Jim Wilder, two gold seekers, partners for a quarter of a century.

It was an epitaph sealed by pitch in an old tin can, and Finley found it at the foot of a tall pine tree beneath which a grave had been dug. Here it lay:

"Old Pard, it matters not in the eyes of the Creator whether you are buried with all the pomp and pageantry of a king or the simplicity of a peasant. This giant pine that marks your last resting place seems to say, 'Here lies one man who has lived the life of the twenty-third Psalm.'"

DORSEY MAY ASK FOR DELAY IN FRANK CASE

Information From Valdosta Is That Solicitor Needs Week More of Preparation.

HENSLEE IN CONFERENCE

Juror Under Fire Declares His Visit to South Georgia Was Unimportant.

That Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey will ask for a week further postponement of the hearing of the motion for a new trial for Leo M. Frank, convicted of the murder of Mary Phagan, when it is called before Judge L. S. Ryan on next Saturday, October 19, is indicated by information received in Atlanta Saturday night from Valdosta, where he and his assistants, A. E. Stephens, are working on the answer to the defense's lengthy petition for a new trial.

Solicitor Dorsey issued a positive statement that he will require at least another week in which to complete the answer, and expresses doubt that he will be able to have his case on by next Saturday. Both he and Mr. Stephens have been working on the case twelve and fifteen hours a day, and Solicitor Dorsey said that hard work would be necessary up until the time of the hearing.

He said he had made more rapid progress than he would have been able to make had he undertaken the preparation of his case in Atlanta, but even under these favorable circumstances hardly expects to complete his work within another week. There was nothing in Judge Ryan's ruling Saturday, in which he postponed the hearing for another week, which excluded the possibility of a still further delay, and it is thought that further time will be granted. The Solicitor should be pleased if the execution of Frank is stayed, especially by the order delaying the hearing.

Juror A. H. Henslee, who was so violently attacked by the defense in its motion for a new trial, spent Saturday in Valdosta, and was classified for several hours with the Solicitor. It is thought that deep significance attaches to the visit, although Henslee would give out no making of what his conversation with the Solicitor General was. He stated that he had dropped into Valdosta on his accustomed trip to the town, and that his conference with the Solicitor was merely incidental. Henslee, returning to Valdosta, returned against him by the defense in its motion, and stated that he was absolutely unprepared on any way or on the other before the trial. His statements regarding Frank's guilt, he said, were made after the trial, when he thought he had a right to talk.

MRS. ANNA ANSCHUTZ as she appears at work in her garden near Decatur, completing the work that death prevented her husband from accomplishing, a task which she says is inspired by the thought that the spirit of her husband will her to avoid spade and hoe and directs her as she carries out the plans laid by the late young landscape gardener.

Widow Finishes Work That Death Prevented Landscape Gardener From Accomplishing.

Mrs. Anna Anschutz, a slender young woman, working all day long in her garden on West avenue at a man's work, with spade and hoe and heavy shears, is inspired to such unusual labor by the thought that her husband, who is dead, will her to do it.

"Of course I could not rid of this place and make my living this way," she said yesterday to a Sunday American reporter. "But it was Carl's garden. He made it, loved it and gave it to me. Always it seems that he is at my back or looking out the window and telling me about one thing or another."

"The other night I dreamed that he came to me and said: 'You must never get rid of this garden. You must never get rid of this garden. You must never get rid of this garden.'"

"The garden entails a large amount of work. Two greenhouse full of ferns and hotbed plants must be cared for, hundreds of beds and plants of vegetables, other vines, box-wood, privet, a rose garden, bulbs and many other things, and she does it all alone, and does the most arduous part of the work."

The Sunday American man, going to the garden, found her hoeing a little hole back of the house. She was digging the soil with the heavy spade into the earth with the precision and good form of an ordinary laborer.

"The husband When Alive. When she looked up at her visitor she revealed herself as a rather commonplace young woman, light-haired and dressed, and slender as a girl. Not a bit of embarrassment was evident as she wiped her moist hands on her apron and came forward to talk about her work and her garden. She must have been a frank and attractive girl. Now she had become a very capable and unusual worker."

"That is all," Mrs. Anschutz said, with the declaration that she is not doing anything unusual for a woman, who was hard at first, because there were many things that I didn't know. But I am learning, and now that I am started, I will get this place in good shape unless I die trying."

"She struck her hoe into the earth with emphatic vigor. "One thing this garden," she said, "is a living for herself on a small place. It takes hard work, though."

It does take hard work. This young woman is up at daylight and is working all the day, weeding, digging, raking, hoeing, transplanting, doing a hundred things incident to the operation of the establishment.

"I don't have time to get lonely," she said. Mrs. Anschutz's aged father, who from Germany is with her, but who never leaves home, she says she may employ a man to help her, but she says it with an air that tells you plainly she does it for duty to work the place herself, and that she will employ help only when it is necessary.

Mrs. Anschutz's husband, a native German, belonged to a prominent family in the old country, and at one time his brother was Ambassador to many nations in Austria.

Mrs. Anschutz will always call it "his garden," and apparently never considers it as her place. She is planning a big overgrown orchard, and she has a plan to plant a vineyard in the little place, with the designation "Anschutz's vineyard." It will be her husband's monument.

$300,000 HUNT FAILS TO LAND $71,000 ROBBER

Southern Express Mystery Still Unsolved After Scores Seek Clues for Month.

EMPLOYEES ARE WATCHED Companies Grieve Most Over Failure of 'Infallible System' of Guarding Valuables.

There are all the makings of as pretty a mystery down Savannah way as ever popped from the pages of Frank Doyle's or Tommy—to-day. A month since the theft of $71,000 was discovered by the Southern Express Company, through which it was sent consigned to Georgia banks, not the slightest breath of a clue has been found to fix any guilt.

For every special agent and detective in the employ of the Southern and the Adams Express companies has hunted the hunt, executive officers are racking their brains and sighting other duties, Pinkertons and local detectives everywhere, between New York and Savannah have been commissioned to find the money or the man, and thousands of dollars are being spent in the investigation.

Every foot of right of way of the Southern and the Adams companies between New York and Savannah has been scoured. Every employee who might be in any way connected with handling or even viewing the money has been investigated, his past and present life, his habits, his tastes, given his thoughts, so far as possible, have been studied. Still there is no sign.

Failure of "System" Bewailed.

It is not the loss of the money that brings the two great express companies. Their officials have announced that they are prepared to spend much more than that amount to find the robber. Their grief arises from the fact that their "infallible system" has gone awry. This system has protected valuables before this. It was thought impossible to steal the contents of any consignment without sign of some sort being left that would point to the robber.

There must be some irregularity, and the express companies men, with secure confidence. There may be no sign, but the thief could not get away with his haul without discovery on street, they declared.

Until this $71,000 robbery occurred it went well. But now the "infallible system" has proved fallible, the money has vanished as into air, without a trace being left of its disappearance.

Two express messengers are named in connection with the shipment of the money. W. L. Schindell of New York, came with the strong box from New York as far as Florence, S. C., where it was transferred to J. J. Schindell, who took it into Savannah.

Both these men are at the DeSoto Hotel in Savannah. They are being kept there by the companies while the investigation is conducted. They are allowed to go where they please, but are never out of sight of one of the company's men.

Both Men Under Guard.

The officials and detectives are now admitting they have investigated the two young men. Schindell is said to move in the highest circles in Louisville set in New York, but he has never been known to drink or to play the white light. Bryan is a country boy, lives at Florence, and runs only as far as Savannah. The habits are said to be good.

The $71,000 was consigned by the Georgia banks; $10,000 was going to Georgia banks; $10,000 was going to the Savannah Bank and Trust Company and $5,000 each to banks in Savannah, Albany, Brunswick and Valdosta. The remaining $36,000 was being sent to a private commercial house. The money was sent in bills of small denominations, none being larger than $25. To ascertain whether one man could have successfully made away with the amount, similar packages were made up. They weighed five pounds and were very bulky, proving that it would have been impossible to conceal it about the person of any man.

Sent in Steel Box.

Messenger Schindell received the money at Jersey City, from an agent of the Adams Express Company. It was in a steel strong box with bills and lying on the inside. The top of the box was worked by a combination known only to the agents at each end of the line. There was an inner door, locked by a key, which was placed in a sealed envelope between the inner and the outer door.

When Schindell received the box at Jersey City, he complained of the weight "looking bad." But refusal to accept a money shipment is a serious matter. The express companies have a policy of severely reprimanding its agents if they cause delays in shipments of currency, as the banks the claims for interest on the large amount, even when the delay is for one day. So Schindell, although dejected, the seals were broken. He talked it over with the agent at Jersey City, and decided to accept the package. Bryan made no complaint concerning the seal, when the shipment was placed in his hands at Florence.

The box was delivered in Savannah Saturday. The express agent placed it in the hands of the agent, who opened it. There was no irregularity. The bills of lading called for $50 and no more. That amount was in its place. "Punty" remarked the agent, "that's a mighty big box for such a little money."

express companies between New York and Savannah was at work. J. R. Hockaday, general manager of the Southern Express Company, went from Atlanta to Savannah with Superintendent Harry Scott of the working. The detectives are still searching, although every resource at command of their ingenuity has been exhausted.

The search has even included travel along every foot of the right of way, a look into every bush and over every embankment. Nothing has been left untried, and the theft has cost the express companies, including the payment of the amount to the banks, more than $100,000.

SLATION URGES STATE EXHIBIT AT PANAMA FAIR

Wants Commercial Bodies to Unite to Show World Georgia's Matchless Resources.

By JAMES B. NEVIN. Will Georgia have an exhibit at the Panama Exposition in San Francisco in 1915?

Will Georgia have a building that will do her credit, that visitors to the big show may inspect the many exhibits this State may set up there, to her own future greatness and glory?

Should the Panama Canal be of importance to any people or any community, it is of the highest and most far-reaching importance to the South.

If it is of importance to the South, it is of supreme importance to Georgia.

Governor Slaton announces in advance his entire and hearty sympathy with any sensible and constructive work inaugurated with a view to Georgia's proper representation in San Francisco in 1915.

Governor Urges an Exhibit. "It will never do," said the governor, discussing this matter Saturday, "for Georgia not to have a building of her own, filled with her matchless products, agricultural and otherwise."

"I hope the public may be awakened to the vast importance of this matter. I stand ready and willing to cooperate to the limit of my personal and official authority and influence."

Charles J. Harden, president of the recently organized State Chamber of Commerce, feels the same way about it.

"I propose to make this matter of a great exhibit at San Francisco an object of my best endeavor," said Mr. Slaton.

"I hope to interest the State Chamber every county in the State. Governor Slaton, commenting upon Georgia and Georgia's representation at the Panama Exposition, said:

"Georgia's factories supply materials to workmen in Panama, her marble quarries furnish material for magnificent buildings everywhere, notable for the new Ciudad of Managua and not long before that for a handsome public building in Philadelphia, she has the only solid mountain of magnifolite granite in the whole world."

Sounds Praise of Atlanta. "Georgia katolin mines supply crop-growers everywhere, and of a quality unsurpassed, her cotton is a tremendous factor in preserving the balance of trade of the world, her agricultural resources are incomparable; in Georgia is located the second largest mule market in the world, her capital city is the pride of her citizens and the greatest in the South."

"There is now going on in Hartwood County a splendid county fair. There will be dozens of them held in Georgia in 1915. The little Hartwood fair, relatively small and inconsequential beside a world's exhibition, such as the one in San Francisco will be, still would make a most creditable show at the big fair."

"From the dozens of county fairs to be held in Georgia, think what a grand exhibition of products can be made up for San Francisco in 1915. This Georgia exhibition must be assembled through the efforts of citizens individually and through trade and commercial bodies. Georgia's Constitution prohibits Georgia from making direct appropriations to exhibit such as this must be. If the State Chamber of Commerce will in turn solicit the counties and the local trade bodies to contribute to the exhibition as a realization of the great importance of this work, there will be no difficulty in the way."

Thanks $50,000 Enough. "I do not know, but I should say that a profitable and effective service might be made with $50,000. It may be less, but I am not sure. If trade bodies generally, and the movement Georgia might exhibit her agricultural equipment as part of the exhibit at San Francisco. That is a problem that necessarily must be worked out. I hope the movement will be put in motion promptly."

"There is now a State commission having this matter in hand, authorized by the Legislature. I take it the Legislature meant business when it authorized this commission. It is made up of good men and true—appointed by Governor Brown."

"If citizens through their various organizations will arouse themselves and get things going, I presume this Legislature will be ready to make such recommendations to the Legislature eventually as seem fit and proper and warranted."

"In the meantime, let's all think about the big show soon to be opened in honor of the completion of the Panama Canal, and let's see that Georgia shall be represented there as she should be."

Children Breed Prize Chickens Little Sister Aids Boy, 7 Years Old

Walter and Margaret von Collary Have Name for Each of Sixty Feathered Beauties.

Walter VonCollary is red-haired, so is his sister Margaret. Therefore, it is natural that Walter and sister Margaret should be captives of industry at the tender ages of 7 and 6, respectively, and should raise, all by themselves, fine blooded chickens that take all prizes at the Atlanta Poultry Show.

The Atlanta Poultry Show, he it known, is no "class" affair, as the first prize goes to the bird with the most of the country.

Walter's proprietor, general manager and what to a pair full of, of six chickens as anyone would care to see. Margaret is his assistant, and together the two children, who have now been enrolled in public school yet, care for the chickens, collect the eggs, set the hens and judge them by points when the time for the poultry show comes around.

Enter the War Blue Ribbon. The chickens are Black Langshans and Blue Andalusians. None other will Walter raise. He scores the Reds and the Barred Rocks in less than a year.

When the last poultry show was held Walter, inspired by his mother, decided to go in for the big prize, and entered his chickens in the general contest, instead of in the children's events. He was rewarded, because his chickens proved to be the best of them all.

Every chicken in the yard is named, and Walter and Margaret know them all by name. One of the victors numbered at it the other day. "That's 'Thinks,'" said Walter. "That's

Wilson to Still Keep Hands Off in Mexico GIVES HIM SOLE DICTATORSHIP

All Deputies Not Members of Catholic Party Put in Prison by President.

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 11.—Provisional President Victoriano Huerta is tonight absolutely dictator of Mexico. His action of dissolving the Chamber of Deputies and arresting all Deputies except those allied with the Catholic party has given him the sole power of government of the republic.

Mexico City has recovered from the shock of Huerta's latest coup and tonight a calm has settled over the Capital. His many friends are to be the calm before the storm, but what effect Huerta's move will have upon the future of Mexico is not yet clear.

The leading issue tonight is: "What will Felix Diaz do when he arrives in Vera Cruz and is informed of the condition of the country?"

Impressing all but the Catholic Deputies Huerta has clearly indicated that he will support the candidacy of Gamba for the Presidential election October 26. In the meantime this is meeting Mexican shores and has announced he will be a candidate for President.

With the support of Huerta, who controls the military and political machinery of practically every State except those in the north which have seceded, Gamba's election is assured.

Seizes All Power. The previously agreed opinion of a prominent Mexican politician was that Huerta would use his opportunity to dissolve the Chamber of Deputies and throw the majority of the republic into his own hands, thus enabling him to elect Gamba by overwhelming majority.

It is believed that such an election would indicate that the larger portion of the republic has been pacified and allowed to freely express its will in the election.

As there will not be sufficient time to hold elections to elect new Deputies before October 26, there will be no Chamber of Deputies to inaugurate the election or to interfere with the plans the administration might have.

The families and friends of the imprisoned deputies are greatly indignant over what disposition might be made of the prisoners. But Huerta has several times assured all that he will guarantee that no prisoner harm comes to them. The penitentiary is surrounded by a heavy military guard.

The city is quiet tonight, more so than it has been for some months. Hundreds of police and soldiers, both infantry and cavalry, patrol the streets prepared to put down any uprising which might occur.

The rapid-fire guns which were placed in the palace last February and later withdrawn were returned to duty. On every hand there is a feeling that the government is prepared to resist any insurgent movement.

Newspapers Banned. In the city today either revealed, except imperial in their discussion of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Huerta, who was the leader of the Government, Deputies until he was placed in a place in the Cabinet, said tonight that Huerta took his action against the Deputies when it was clear that there was a plot aimed in the Chamber to put Huerta out of the north to triumph.

Party leaders get it through supposed to have been unceremoniously taken last night, but the crowd, greatly incensed, was there, and a demonstration, owing to the presence of a large crowd.

Vers Cruz Hears Deputies Are Freed. Special Cable to the Associated Press. MEXICO, Oct. 11.—An unconfirmed report reached here tonight from Mexico City that the 110 Deputies arrested and imprisoned here by orders of President Huerta have been freed.

Feeling is reported as running very high in the capital following the liberation of the members of the Senate of Dominguez and the publication of excerpts from the speech denouncing Huerta which he delivered on the day before his disappearance.

Wilson to Still Keep Hands Off in Mexico

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—The Administration has determined to keep hands off the new situation which has developed in Mexico.

Huerta's assumption of full control was discussed by the President and John Bassett Moore, counselor of the State Department.

Later it was announced that the question was still one of internal Mexican politics with which the United States could have nothing to do.

The unofficial report comes that John Lind was about to proceed from Vera Cruz to Mexico City to convey a new message to the Huerta Government. This report was not denied at the State Department.

Deputies to Collect Income Tax Not To Be Named Until Early Next Year.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—It will be January 1 before any appointments are made by Charles O'Conor, of the Internal Revenue Department, for the collection of the income tax. Senator Hoke Smith has conferred on the subject and learned this.

Under the plan now in tentative shape Georgia will have six deputies. Tennessee five and Alabama six. They are to be held $1,000 per annum.

SAVANNAH TO GET POST FOR PELLAGRA STUDY

SAVANNAH, Oct. 11.—That the government will establish a post in Savannah for the study and prevention of pellagra is practically assured in a letter received today from Congressman Charles Edwards, who is in conference with Surgeon General Blue on the subject.

As the result of recent meetings conducted the last two weeks by Mr. Edwards, who is visiting in the North, the Fortified Hills Baptist Church has been selected as the headquarters for the study.

The Rev. William O. Foster will continue his series of evangelistic sermons at the West End Christian Church tonight. His subject will be "The Soul's Victory." These sermons

ALL ATLANTA PASTORS BACK FOR FALL WORK

Practically Every Pulpit in City Will Be Filled To-day—New Interest Awakened.

With the vacation period for pastors and congregations over, the churches of Atlanta have begun their fall campaign with renewed vigor and a gratifying attendance. Practically every pulpit in the city will be filled to-day, and in many of them subjects of unusual interest will be discussed.

An attack on the divorce art will mark the sermon of Dr. L. O. Brickett in the First Christian Church to-day. Dr. Brickett's theme will be "The Divorce Mill, the Grind, the Grinders and the Ground."

A unique service will be conducted this evening in the Second Baptist Church, of which Dr. John E. White is pastor. The members of the Atlanta Fire Department have been invited to attend, and they will go to the church in uniform. Dr. White will preach a sermon appropriate to the occasion.

A pleasing feature of the services in the Central Congregational Church to-day will be the singing of Miss Manie Adel Hays, who has decided to stay in Atlanta during October instead of returning to New York, as she has expected. Miss Hays will sing at both the morning and evening services. Leslie Hubbard, hars, has been invited to sing.

Owing to the absence of Dr. Caleb B. Miller, who is conducting a revival in Kewanee, Tenn., the pulpit of the Central Baptist Church will be filled at both services to-day by the former pastor, Dr. H. Robertson.

The recently organized choruses of 40 voices will furnish special music.

The Rev. A. W. Pickens, who has been conducting successful revival services at Atlanta during the summer, has returned to his pastorate of the Western Heights Baptist Church, of Atlanta, and will begin his new ministry to-day with a series of evangelistic sermons. He will be assisted by Professor W. R. Jackson and his chorus of more than 100 voices.

BRYAN'S COUSIN SELLS FLORIDA FARMS TO JAPANESE

William S. Jennings Pilots Vanguard of Hundreds of Nipponese from California.

VIEW SECRETARY'S TRACTS

Anti-Asian Laws Asked—Race War With Oriental Leading the Negroes Feared.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—Japanese driven from California by the alien land laws are in Florida buying farm lands owned by former Governor William S. Jennings, first cousin of William Jennings Bryan and a close business associate of the Secretary of Agriculture.

A vanguard of 25 of the Oriental, representing a hundred of California Japanese, who are now seeking asylum and unsettled lands here in Florida.

At present, they are looking over Jennings' land holdings in Clay and Duval counties, about 40 miles south of Jacksonville.

They are wondering if there was anything more than coincidence between the recent visit of Secretary Bryan in California and the present influx of Japanese in Florida.

There is nothing in this movement," he said. "For the past two years I have been in contact with the Japanese in Clay County, Florida, and the first thing I saw when I came here last July was a large number of Japanese landing for their farms.

Florida people, however, are not taking Jennings' view of the matter. They see a vast difference between a small detachment of Japanese establishing a Florida colony in 1906 and the 1913 vanguard of one State and seeking the industrial and agricultural support of any other that may offer hospitality.

The thinking people of the State know that Florida already has one race problem in the negroes. They do not want that problem complicated with another.

COUPLE OF YEARS AS A YEAR FOR HEARST NEWS PAPERS

For More Than Twenty-five Years Their Cry of Progress Has Been 'Dig the Canal'—Won Against the Dictation of Foreign Powers

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—The completion of the Panama Canal yesterday was not only a triumph for the nation, but a victory for the Hearst newspapers.

A quarter of a century ago Mr. Hearst, in the San Francisco Examiner made urgent appeal for the building of a canal to unite the oceans and add to the commercial resources of the United States.

He continued this fight for years and carried it on through his various newspapers.

When, as a result of awakening public sentiment, it became evident that a treaty of the Senate would be signed and the Atlantic was bound to come, Mr. Hearst, through his papers, led the fight in all parts of the country.

At the time of the signing of the Bulwer-Crawley treaty, when the Republic was making every effort to secure its re-statement, Hearst stepped into the breach and for the public, was able to achieve a brilliant defeat of this plan.

In an editorial printed in the New York Journal November 19, 1901, Mr. Hearst said, under the caption "Journalism That Has Acted":

"At last a treaty has been signed under which the United States can proceed with safety and honor to carry out the policy of long and strenuous struggle."

"DIG THE NICARAGUA CANAL"

The handiwork that have been signed for half a century have been unbroken.

The Clayton-Bulwer treaty has been substantially abrogated and the laws in the original Hay-Pauncefote agreement have been rescinded.

The Journal feels a peculiar gratification in this outcome, because it may be considered that to have been largely responsible for the refusal of the Senate to consent to Mr. Hay's original surrender. That surrender had been regarded as a splendid diplomatic triumph. The country had been prepared to receive it as such, and almost every newspaper and statesman at first did so receive it.

But the Journal from the very first intimated that it had fatal defects and demanded that it be altered or rejected. It was felt that its undertaking was hopeless; its own correspondents had discovered the managements of the canal as good as null.

Appetite Ho! Ho! 'Tis a Great Joy

Stuart's Dyspeptic Tablets Are the Best Appetite Makers, Dyeptics and Stomach Bufferers Can Use.

Appetite is very largely a result of the health of the stomach. When we have a rousing appetite at the sight or smell of food the stomach through its connection with the mind of a man is in a healthy condition. If it is not so, the stomach is not healthy and we are actually nauseated.

Waiter—'How good Stuart's Dyspeptic Tablets make me eat like a horse.'

Guest—'Bully good. Stuart's Dyspeptic Tablets make me eat like a horse.'

Appetite makes the glands of the mouth open and saliva flows very freely—the tongue moistens the food. This is the first digestive step. If it is not so, the food is not properly digested and there quickly reappears the stomach. It is not so, the food is not properly digested and there quickly reappears the stomach. Plan to "Page" Polo Grounds Derided—Not Even Bankers Could Afford Seats.

Where are the Atlanta bankers? The Boston convention ended Thursday, Atlanta, as so promptly pointed out, and so often, is centrally located. It's only a day and night ride from Boston, where, from private advices received here, everything had been thoroughly "done" by Thursday.

WORK IN LOVE, URGES ACTRESS FROM AUGUSTA School for Unhappy Wives Is Suggested by Mrs. Roslyn Mundell.

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT. BOSTON, Oct. 11.—From a reading over a month of afternoon teas, dinners and luncheons in the Southern mansion, attending to the charities which were brought to her attention, dining, dancing and traveling the hours away from the stage to a hard-working actress in a woman company, is the change which has come into the life of Mrs. Roslyn Mundell, of the fine old Augusta, Ga., family of that name. The change came because Mrs. Mundell has come into the life of Mrs. Roslyn Mundell, of the fine old Augusta, Ga., family of that name. It developed to-day that the stomach of the dead man, which was removed and reported to have been forwarded to the State Chemist in Atlanta to determine whether he died from poison, was not forwarded. The enforcement county commissioners are given as the reason for failing to forward the organ to Atlanta, the commissioners not feeling inclined to pay the expense.

LONG TERM BONDS BUYERS OF LEGISLATION

SHORT TERM NOTES STRONG

Cash Calls for These Are Heavy. Billion-Dollar Financing in Foreign Situation.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

In these days of long term bonds, it is not so much the price of the bond, but its utility that is the thing to be considered. Very little trade, indeed—very little.

There is no doubt that the demand for long term securities is due to the expectation of unfavorable legislation by Congress during the next three or four months.

COTTON CHEAPER, BUT MAY RECOVER

Much of Georgia Crop Sold and It Is Grading Higher Than Western Product.

By M. A. ROSE.

Cotton is on the toboggan—off something like $4 a bale from the season's high point.

Much of the Georgia crop, however, has been sold, and money is easier. Considerable sums will be returning to New York by another week.

Western belt of white cotton being a premium because most of the crop was raised in Georgia and the Southeast generally have been better than the rest of the country.

Most of the cotton in this part of the belt has been light enough in the boll so that the rains have not damaged the staple, and besides there have been no excessive rains.

The Eastern crop is grading good, but weather first appeared in the movement of the crop is at its height in October.

WORK IN LOVE, URGES ACTRESS FROM AUGUSTA School for Unhappy Wives Is Suggested by Mrs. Roslyn Mundell.

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT. BOSTON, Oct. 11.—From a reading over a month of afternoon teas, dinners and luncheons in the Southern mansion, attending the charities which were brought to her attention, dining, dancing and traveling the hours away from the work of a hard-working actress in a woman company, is the change which has come into the life of Mrs. Roslyn Mundell, of the fine old Augusta, Ga., family of that name. The change came because Mrs. Mundell felt that it should come. She is a woman of breeding, highest social position, beauty, charm, and with an exceptionally magnetic personality which has been the cause of her being the most popular actress in the world, she has never before in her life been so happy.

She has all phases of life. Mrs. Mundell has been on the stage for a few weeks, but in that time she has made it her business to see every phase of life, and she is not surprised when she is asked to be interviewed. "I was so frightened when they asked me to be interviewed," she said, "that I really don't believe it's going to be so bad after all. When we were soon launched out into the discussion of life and its aspects from all angles."

"Love and hard work, then more and more hard work are the only way for every kind of life, she said. "Love—that's my religion. And when we have love in our hearts, be it for one person or for humanity in general, we have a sure hold on happiness. When we love and love truly we forget ourselves, and when we are successful in putting self aside we are eternally in the background of the world, and before we know it we are in the possession of that which we have been so breathless for."

"Most important in World. Love is the most important thing in the world, and no woman ever accomplishes more wonderful or more noble work than that of loving. No girl, no matter how talented, would seek a career. A good husband, a happy home and a nice big family of children should be her career—the only one worth while and the only one that will last. Many girls are carried away by the thought of making money, but in the end she does love concentrated in the home. I wish we might make our suffragette results like that."

"Then you're not a suffragette?" I asked. "Suffragette" and her brown eyes glowed delightfully. "I am not a thought of it. No, indeed. I think every Southern woman is essentially a home woman and believes she should use her influence with her husband and with her own to bring about the conditions she desires rather than going out and fighting for them herself. A woman gains nothing and loses much by these suffragette methods."

"Next to love comes work. Love and work can transform the ugliest woman in the world into a beauty. Love and work can make the most miserably unhappy woman the most beautiful. It's the forgetting of self which counts. With love comes unselfishness. If two people really love each other, they will work for each other, they will make their own money, they will enjoy real companionship, and can't help finding happiness."

"You know, I think there should be a school for unhappy wives. I think it would be pretty full," she added, "and it would be interesting to have the girls who showed her wonderful fundamental essentials for the maintenance of a happy home, or if they were completely untrained for that course, then we might give them another course for some other career—that something which would keep them busy. If the women who feel and act like this time away, the women with money, society women, who as a rule are the most unhappy women of the world, should start out and do something really worth while, they would find that happiness was not the delusion and the snare they have come to believe it. It is "family" because they are selfish, that they are unhappy. They love themselves, and that never does. So much of our trouble is born of the selfishness of the individual. I think if a girl has no parents to protect her that she should marry young, the younger the better, for a man should marry just as soon as he is ready to marry. I would say to any girl, no matter how alluring her career might look, put it aside and marry."

"The stage is wonderful. The people of the stage are not a class, they're a race. They are the most human, the most broad-minded, the most interested class of people one could wish to know. I should not have the least fear in letting a young daughter of mine go on the stage. The pitfalls we hear so much about are mine and a girl is really more protected there than she would be in many other lines of work."

"What is the most important essential of success on the stage?" I asked. "Intelligence," she answered promptly. "A girl might have all the training in the world and if she had not the intelligence to properly interpret her part that would be of no avail."

County Too Poor to Pay for Post-mortem

Mystery Surrounding Death of David Weeks, Valdosta Farmer, is Still Unsolved.

VALDOSTA, Oct. 11.—The mystery surrounding the death of David Weeks, a young farmer, whose body was found floating in a pool of water near the tracks of the Georgia and Florida Railroad, six miles south of Valdosta, last Sunday, remains unsolved. It developed to-day that the stomach of the dead man, which was removed and reported to have been forwarded to the State Chemist in Atlanta to determine whether he died from poison, was suspected, was never forwarded to the chemist, but remains in the hands of the county coroner. The enforcement of strict economy and retrenchment by the Board of County Commissioners is given as the reason for failing to forward the organ to Atlanta, the commissioners not feeling inclined to pay the expense.

Atlanta's crematory again made garbage disposal a grave problem in the eyes of Mayor Woodward Saturday when it was closed down for repairs and the garbage carts began to pile up here piles of waste and trash. Samuel N. Ervin, attorney for the Destructor Company, however, said he felt sure that the plant would be turned over to the city within a short time, completely up to specifications.

"But one of the sewage disposal plants has been accepted by the city," said Mr. Ervin, "but it is generally acknowledged that we have the best sewage disposal system in the world."

"The engineer in charge of the plant for the Destructor Company said he expected to have it in working order by Monday. The city has only paid $15,000 of the $250,000 purchase price of the plant. Mayor Woodward has announced that no more money will be paid on it until it is completely up to specifications."

Until the official test is made the Destructor Company is burning the garbage at 25 cents a ton, the price it guarantees to the city to be the maintenance cost when it is finally completed.

James E. Sullivan Tells of What International Congress Will Do for Amateur Sport—Importance Is Overlooked.

HOT TUSSELE OVER WEIGHTS

Citizenship, Standing of Athletes, Program of Events and Rules, of Contests Matters Discussed at Berlin.

By James E. Sullivan.

ONLY time can demonstrate the beneficial results to athletes throughout the world, from the formation of the International Federation of Amateur Athletes, the first congress of which was held recently at Berlin.

I had the honor of being one of the American delegates, and have no pleasure in saying that the congress reports published in the American papers of the proceedings in Berlin, conveyed an idea of the importance of the occasion.

One had to be present to understand the great results of the congress of the world collected in one building and with one thought uppermost in their minds and that was the betterment and standardization of track and field sport. I might say that this was the main object of the entire congress, in yet but in entering, but it will gradually assume the proper shape.

Second Convention in Paris. Next year we are to have our second convention in Paris, France, and by that time we will have the rules and by-laws whittled into shape. Perhaps the first time in athletic history the proper definition of an amateur will be known, and for once and all the athletes of the world will be confronted with uniform rules to guide them.

A long and very interesting discussion took place when it came to defining as to what constituted international citizenship. It is men in the case where an athlete goes from one country to another, and in the new climate fulfills the rights, according to law of naturalization, and arms himself with the right to compete in the Olympic games for the land of his adoption.

The European and the English saw the reason why a man should be allowed to compete for the land of his adoption, and they were willing to vote for the rule which stipulated that an athlete could only compete for the land of his birth.

It was a long and interesting discussion, and it was a long and interesting discussion, and it was a long and interesting discussion.

FIRST AMBROSE'S SERIES BEGGAN BUT SCANT SUM

In 1880 Seats Sold for 25 Cents. Prices Have Gone Up to $25 Per Box.

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—Box office receipts, barometer of interest in the Broadway series games, have soared to dizzy heights since the Providence and Metropolitan clubs battled for the first world championship in 1884. Stopped in New York, the premier fight aroused little more than passing interest, was lightly attended and reaped so scant a harvest of receipts that the clubs never even published the figures. Some idea of what they may have been is gleaned from the contest the next year between the Chicago club of the National League and St. Louis of the American Association.

Seven games were played in four cities—Chicago, St. Louis, Pittsburgh and Cincinnati. The fight was hot. The entire seven games in 1885 yielded but $2,000.

Seats sold for 25 cents. These were the days when a seat in the bleachers cost a quarter and 50 cents provided the best seats in the grandstand. From this modest admission seems to have left many enthusiasts away from the games. Not only this, widespread enthusiasm was lacking in the contests. From their humble origin admission prices have grown to the dignity of $25 for a box seating four down at the edge of the diamond in 1913. And a dollar is the least of bills that will admit one to the contest. This has a way with the bleachers stand.

Back in the infancy of the world's series the man who attended a game left his office at the usual hour for the ball game, and, after passing through the runways to the field and picked the best seats, he returned to his office. He was not there to be seen. He was not there to be seen. He was not there to be seen.

But the evolution from the days of empty seats to the roaring bleachers and the overflowing grandstand, packed to capacity, has been gradual. In 1887, when the first series was played, only 11 games were the principal part of the United States series. The next year a dozen games—the box office receipts climbed up to $100,000. The ten games played between New York and St. Louis brought in $1,000,000. In 1894, first year of the Olympic cup series, the receipts rose to $1,500,000. Only four games were played that year. In 1900, the series was played in Baltimore and two at New York, and the total receipts were $1,800,000.

There was no battle for the world's championship between New York and Boston in 1902. In 1903 the National League and American League series began. The world's series games they also played. In 1904, the series was played in New York and Chicago. The receipts were $1,500,000. In 1905, $1,225,000 were the gross receipts. In 1906, $1,500,000 were the gross receipts. In 1907, $1,500,000 were the gross receipts. In 1908, $1,500,000 were the gross receipts. In 1909, $1,500,000 were the gross receipts. In 1910, $1,500,000 were the gross receipts. In 1911, $1,500,000 were the gross receipts. In 1912, $1,500,000 were the gross receipts. In 1913, $1,500,000 were the gross receipts.

With the rising cost of baseball came a corresponding increase in the prize money of the players. The first game of the world's series, as now played, in 1884 netted the winning players $1,182 each and the winners $1,312. Last year's fight of 1912 was high water mark in players prize money. The players from Boston and New York teams in divided between them $117,500, 50 per cent to the winning team and 50 per cent to the losing team.

Details of financial matters in the games since 1907 are given in the following table:

Year	Games	Box Office	Prize Money	Player's Share
1884	11	$100,000	$1,182	$1,312
1885	10	$1,000,000

NEW CHAMPION BEGAN CAREER AS A CADDIE

BOSTON, Mass., Oct. 11.—Frankie Outmit, the Brookline golfer, who won the United States open title, is a member of Woodland club. He is little known as a member of the game—his name is not even in the list of winners of the tournament. He is a member of the Woodland club, and he is a member of the Woodland club.

Four years ago he won the Intercollegiate golf championship of Great Britain, but the significance of his win was not in the fact that he gained the title, but the kind of golf he played. He won the final on the first nine holes, so to speak, and the match was over by 8.7 as no need of off-hole after hole in four or better.

His next appearance was as a full-fledged golfer, a member of the Woodland club, and by winning the Woodland cup his first year as a member brought him considerable honor. Next his history was looked into, and it was found that he was born in Warren, Ontario, Canada, where his father was employed by the Country Club at one time, and that the lad had followed his daddy over to the club, had found a broken club and many balls and started in to play when he was five.

Next he took his spare time as a youngster in grammar school to which he went, getting money by odd jobs, and his employer, noting that the lad knew more about the game than they did, relied on his judgment in selecting the club.

Realizing that he wanted to save his amateur rating, he gave up caddying before his sixteenth birthday, and that same year won the Intercollegiate championship. Outmit played in four national championships, and didn't win a place in the driving until this year, when it looked as though he was going to win the low score at Garden City, until Chick Evans proved in a winner with a remarkable homeward run of 42.

Magnates to Wage War on Lynch Four Owners After Tom's Scalp

By W. J. McBeath.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—Certain quarters of the National League indicate some violent battles at the next annual meeting of the parent body held in this city next December. A well-remembered hum prevails in the inner circles of the moreover, of a peaceful disposition. He is likely to pursue the policy of "letting good enough alone." As Dreyfus thinks—and he thinks well of Lynch—so will go the votes of Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. It is a well known fact that Barry is the high power behind the new organization at the Quaker City.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 14.—The present time being the balance of power. So long as Britton strings with Dreyfus and Lynch effort will be made by the anti-Lynch faction to win over the boss of the Cardinals. In such a case it would not be surprising to see Herrmann surrender. He is a well known magnate who believes firmly in the rule of the majority. Last year he saved Lynch because he thought a great principle was involved. He had a change over Murphy's head that forced the reform element around in his particular way of thinking and in the streets of the city.

There is just one far-reaching possibility of the anti-Lynch faction being out. It is to be able to interest the St. Louis vote. This would be a candidate satisfactory to all. Three well known men of baseball are being hoisted for Tom Lynch's job. One is Joe E. Brown, president of the Giants and president of the American League. Another is Tom Lynch, a newspaper man of Louisville. The third is a man named Garry Herrmann before the Polo ground in New York. Each of these men is perhaps most formidable. In St. Louis, president of the International League.

Barrow has not sought the office of president of the International League. He has an unenvied term of office as president of the International League. He has done well in his present sphere, is popular and able. If there is any chance of coaxing him into the fight he is likely to become the most popular candidate.

MANLY fighter has lost his reputation through making low weight. I can recall the closest margin by which Jack McAuliffe defended and retained his title. Of course, in eliminating the 88-year-old boy with Tom Carrera, because McAuliffe should have been on a hospital bed at that time instead of in the ring fighting the charge of Madison, Wis., under the charge of Billy Madden.

Three days before the fight he was down to weight and feeling fine. Then came several great snowstorms and Tom Carrera became an impossibility. Try as Jack would in the gymnasium he could not keep his weight down and gradually it began to creep up on him. The day before the battle he went to Chicago and found himself four pounds overweight. As we were to have the fight at night, he had to make a dash for it. He had to make a dash for it. He had to make a dash for it.

ATELL AT END AS A FACTOR IN BOXING WORLD

FOR more than ten years Abe Attell, the former featherweight champion of the world, was the terror of his contemporaries. But times will be the end confer the most powerful, and the clever Heber Attel remained at the top of his class for many years. However, an intimation of his eventual decline was given in the bout between Attel and Jim Driscoll, the best fighter of the day, that John Bull ever produced. This battle has been declared to be the most scientific contest ever staged in New York in recent years. Driscoll was given a share. The bout was a ten-round no-decision bout and Attel retained his title.

The public public were not ready to concede Driscoll's superiority for ever and a return match was called for. It failed to materialize for no satisfactory arrangements could be made. He never returned to meet Attel. Attel was a man of peace. He was a man of peace. He was a man of peace.

ONLY a short time ago he was beaten by Willie Beecher, a second-rater. This defeat proved to be the crushing of any desire for a return fight in a public spectacle. Attel was through with the fighting game and that he pulled out. He never saw him with the gloves on again. He has been in the ring more than 100 battles as an amateur. He entered the ring for $200,000. He entered the ring for $200,000. He entered the ring for $200,000.

He earned something like a quarter of a million dollars by his ring work. A great part of this money went to the bookmakers of the East. Attel's hesitating to be a bookmaker. He has never been able to completely desert the cards and the pool. He has lost a small fortune while retaining the chances of getting the kale.

PHYSICIAN UNDER ARREST

Henry County Doctor Denies Accusation—Married Day After Funeral of Wife.

Interest in the sensational circumstances surrounding the death of Mrs. Clara A. Barron, wife of a prominent White House (Henry County) physician, started here Saturday afternoon, when the stomach and other vital organs were brought to the laboratory of Dr. Edgar Everhart, of this city, to be analyzed for traces of poison which her husband is suspected of administering.

Dr. Barron, protesting his innocence, was locked up in the Henry County jail at McDonough. Mrs. Barron's body had been exhumed Friday in the presence of the coroner of Pike County, after the warrant for Dr. Barron's arrest had been sworn out by W. R. Mann, the father of Mrs. Barron.

Dr. Everhart said that he already had begun his analysis of the contents of the stomach and of the condition of the other organs brought to him, but that it would be three or four days before he would be able to make a definite report to the authorities who are conducting the investigation.

Married Day After Funeral. The conduct of Dr. Barron which led to the issuing out of the warrant for his arrest by W. R. Mann, father of the dead woman, was his mysterious disappearance immediately after the death of his wife and then his marriage with Miss Cora Wheeler, a neighbor, at Columbus, within a day of the time the body of his dead wife had been placed in the ground at Liberty Hill.

It is charged that during the last year Barron left his wife and four children and ran away with another woman and lived with her for some time.

Left Wife Sick, It is Said. As a crowning act of inhumanity, the neighbors say they witnessed her, while his wife was lying on her sick bed the day before her mysterious death, leave home at moon and take Miss Wheeler automobile until he did not return, they declare, until the evening.

Mrs. Barron grew sick the latter part of last week and was attended by her husband. She became ill last Saturday and died unexpectedly that night. She was buried at Liberty Hill Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Barron was married to Miss Belle Lou Mann before her marriage and was extremely popular as a social hostess at the home of Henry County's leading families.

Dr. Barron is the son of Dr. J. M. E. Barron, a physician of Atlantic Georgia.

ACCUSED AS AN ASSASSIN

Senor Dominguez Murdered After Attacking President—Predicted His Own Death.

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 11—General Huerta to-day suspended Congress, Senators and Deputies were notified that they need not meet this afternoon, as the provisional President had proclaimed a new election for members of Congress on October 26, the date of the presidential election.

Senor Dominguez, who disappeared on the night of September 22 after making a speech denouncing General Huerta as an assassin, is dead. It was learned today that his body was found on September 24 at Cuernavaca, a suburb of the city.

He was arrested on the night of the day he made his speech. Investigation begun by the Congress and the Dominguez case was continued to-day, despite the arrest of more than 100 Deputies last night on direct orders from the administration.

119 Now In Custody. By arresting the Deputies, Huerta practically announced his assumption of the dictatorship of Mexico. One hundred and thirteen are now in custody and warrants are out for two others who have evaded arrest.

General Huerta said that he had ordered the arrest of the Deputies because the disappearance of Dominguez must be explained and had refused to withdraw the demand made under the President.

His arrest is criticized. The Seventy-ninth Infantry was held up—armed at the barracks all night and at dawn was reinforced by another regiment ready for quick action. Rapid-fire guns were kept ready for immediate movement.

Hours before the time set for Congress to reconvene, a large force of police and soldiers was sent to the Chamber of Deputies. This indicated that Huerta was planning to dissolve Congress.

After it became known that Dominguez was dead, his friends reported that he had made his last effort of attacking Huerta. To one of them he said:

Know Spanish Meant Death. "I know that Spanish means my death, but someone has to make a stand or the democracy will be gone."

The Dominguez home was at Cuernavaca, but the Senator had always lived in Mexico City during the Congressional session. It is believed that after his arrest he was taken to the home and put to death there after arrangements had been made to "prove" that he had committed suicide.

The Congressional committee that investigated the arrest of Dominguez was able to trace him only as far as Cuernavaca in an automobile, in which he was guarded by two secret service men.

In his speech to the Senate Dominguez had said: "You will tell me, gentlemen, that the attempt to depose Huerta is dangerous, the attempt, who assassinate anyone who is an obstacle to his wishes, but I should not matter gentlemen. The country exists from the fulfillment of its duty. There is the risk—the certainty—that you will lose your lives. Will you? Do you fear of death permit such a man to continue to fulfill his duty? To my duty is unalterable, gentlemen, and the nation expects you its fulfillment."

Flames Rage for 24 Hours While Wireless Operator Flashes "S. O. S."—Carmania Wins Race to Death Ship, but Saves Few.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 11.—The steamship Volturo, of the Uranium Line, has been burned at sea, with a loss of at least 136 lives. The final death details are received from ten rescue ships that dashed at full speed for the doomed vessel when the "S. O. S." was sent out by her wireless operator.

The Cunard liner Carmania, Captain Barr commanding, was the first ship to reach the stricken Volturo. There were less than a number of reports to-day, the first stating that 136 had been listed in the wireless message that the death list would carry at least 136 names, mostly those of immigrants from the Americas. They were payable each in these numbers listed in each report, but by scrutinizing the wireless messages carefully, the Uranium line officials reached the conclusion that 136 was the correct number.

The Volturo burns 24 hours a terrible storm raging, and hundreds of passengers on ships that had rushed to her aid stood helpless and saw attempt after attempt to save the Volturo's passengers fail.

Flames Rage 24 Hours. The Volturo burns 24 hours a terrible storm raging, and hundreds of passengers on ships that had rushed to her aid stood helpless and saw attempt after attempt to save the Volturo's passengers fail.

The following wireless message from the Volturo gave the first notice of the disaster:

Steamer Volturo, bound from Rotterdam for Halifax and New York with 600 immigrants on board, after abandoned Friday night in latitude 42 25 north longitude 54 23 west. Two hundred and thirty-six passengers missing.

The Carmania was the first liner to pick up the "S. O. S." calls which the operator on the Volturo was frantically sending out. The Carmania immediately reported the calls to other vessels giving the position of the Volturo.

Nine other trans-Atlantic liners were within wireless range and sped toward the burning ship. The race was thrilling. A gale was sweeping the sea and the rescue ships had to pound their way through headwinds and raging waters.

Ten in Rescue Fleet. In the rescue fleet were the following vessels: Carmania, El Touraine, Minneapolis, Rappahannock, Crar, Narragansett, Devonian, Kronland, Crosser Kurfurst and Seydlitz.

The Carmania won the race to the Volturo. She found the vessel a mass of fire, her propeller forcing wallowing helplessly before the wind. All the boats had found the burning ship. Those still afloat were found water-logged by the relief fleet, with half-frozen covering.

The pursuer of the Volturo, who was taken on board the Kronland, reported that the number of passengers on the Volturo was 540, and that she carried a crew of 88, making 628 in all on board. According to the purser's estimate the death list reached only 136.

The severely wounded wireless dispatches from Captain Barr, of the Carmania, told a dramatic story. The dead on the Volturo were burned, crushed and drowned. Four of the Sea Smash

First officer Gardner of the Carmania was in command of a fleet of small boats which tried for two hours to reach the side of the burning ship. The huge rollers averaged the boats and smashed the crews.

In spite of danger, Captain Barr moved the Carmania to a position only 100 feet from the Volturno. The doomed vessel, but the wind prevented.

The scene on the stricken vessel was horrible. The fire had started in the fore end of the ship and had spread toward the stern. Before the onrush of the flames the immigrants and sailors were crowded to aft.

As the cries and shouts for help came to the ears of the officers and crew, they were unable to do more than stand by helpless and watch the victims perish.

Dead Freight Wagon
The pillars which cradled against the rescue ship were cradled by bodies of men, women and children and charred wreckage. Billows of clouds of smoke were borne upward by the gale, adding to the horror of the scene.

Graphic Story of Disaster By Captain of Rescue Ship

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 11.—A thrilling story of the last hours of the Uranium liner Volturno, which was wrecked in mid-Atlantic, was gleaned from a wireless message received here late this afternoon from Captain Barr, of the Cunard liner Carmania which was the first ship to respond to the wireless calls of the Volturno.

It is an epic of tragedy. It follows: "On Thursday, while making our way through a calm sea, we were picked up the following faint 'S. O. S.' call: 'Come quick; ship afloat; fear we are doomed.'"

"The vessel was the ship which came out of the storm, and the location of the burning ship was ascertained. The 'S. O. S.' call was a wild cry of seven or eight men, who were separated from the rest of the ship. The signal was the reward of the victory; that life in its most horrible form was before us."

"I made twenty knots an hour. I was the first to reach the burning ship. I saw about four hundred people on the ship. I saw the flames, and I saw the water as the waves rose and fell."

Department. No Dodging Possible Now.

Why this reluctance to do justice to American vessels? Why this holding, grudgingly introduced, of the tariff law as it reads? Every importer who brings suitable evidence before the United States that he considers are entitled to the 5 per cent discount will appeal to our courts for the enforcement of his rights, if such rights are denied him by the administrators of the law.

"In the case of Section 22 of the Dingley tariff," that laid an extra 10 per cent duty on all imports in ves-els not of the United States, not entitled by treaty or convention to exemption from such duty, through barrister legislation, the extra duty never was collected on imports, but was invariably subject to it, the courts never being asked to interpret judicially the interest of Congress, but a judicial interpretation was usually claimed to be allowed by the way were ignored.

"The tariff will not avail when a party in interest feels that his right to the discount is unjustly denied, and so, whatever the temporary or even the permanent attitude of the administrative branches of the government toward the sub-section, happily for all concerned, the courts will at this time unquestionably interpret its application and scope.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—All Washington is eagerly respecting the moving eyes in the direction of one Senator Furnfold McLenel Simmons of North Carolina, who tariff has brought delayed fame, was American manufacturers declare the tariff will cause a necessary increase to maintain the American tin plate industry, as the cost of production of 25,000 tons in America is $1,000,000 compared with $52,333 in Wales. The cost of labor per ton is $22.95 in America, compared to $17.73 in Wales.

The cost of freight is also a factor of considerable importance to the Welsh trade, as it is presumed the freightage may favor Welsh manufacturers.

Europe's All Prepared to Swap Markets of U. S.

The passage of the new American tariff law has aroused unrestrained jubilation all over Europe. Practically every newspaper of prominence writes with unceasing satisfaction of a measure which, without containing any clause of reciprocity, opens the way to flooding the American markets with foreign goods.

The American this morning adds to the list of nations which are prepared to swap their markets with the American market. The German, French and Italian opinions published in Sunday's American, show a satisfied conviction that the new tariff act will benefit Europe as much as or more than it does America.

It is an event of the highest significance which has kept the press of the world in a state of excitement. The American tariff policy has undergone alteration. The tariff is a rather intricate of powerful capitalist interests have been in train.

Not Free Trade Measure.

"The new law, of course, is very far from being a free trade measure. Through tricky manipulation of customs regulations, importers may again be confronted with obstacles not contemplated by the law itself, but that can not obscure the fact that American doors have been opened wider to our exports than ever before in the history of the world.

Manufacturers believe low ocean freight rates will give them an advantage.

Special Cable to The American. BRISBANE, Oct. 11.—A systematic and vigorously conducted campaign for the development of German trade in the American market promises to be the result of the new tariff law. The work is to be carried on through the medium of the German Chamber of Commerce, which has already obtained by telegraph the leading schedules of the bill in its final revision and is now circulating industrial concerns as to their opinions.

Many Industries to Benefit.

Industries among which are the manufacturer of machinery, the firm which are taking most active interest in the new tariff law.

Called Epoch Making. Coming on the new United States tariff law, the Berlin Bureau of the organ of German mercantile and financial interests, says: "That this highly important event must have a decisive influence on other countries is inevitable. Foreign nations will now appear on the American continent in the role of strong competitors."

Woolen manufacturers, especially those in the three grades, should be a good business, as indicated in the tariff schedule, which will reduce the duty on raw materials, while American articles is proportionately reduced. Cotton exports should also increase, and paper makers, manufacturers of color stuffs, dyes and porcelain have good reason to be satisfied.

Loss of Art Treasures Expected by the French

Special Cable to The American. PARIS, Oct. 11.—The Agence Economique et Financiere, a daily bulletin directed by W. Yves Guyot, the French apostle of free trade, in a general way expresses its satisfaction with the tariff, adding, however, as a rider, that if the absurd and corrupt pension laws did not exist, the projected income tax would not be needed.

The intransigent forecasters that the chief gainers here by the amended tariff will be the art dealers, who have for years past been collecting modern works for which they will now find buyers in America. It is the art side of the question which appeals most to the French.

Gil Blas has just begun an inquiry into the workings of the tariff law. By most it is supposed that it will lead to a great exodus of Fragnards and Watteaus. To Gil Blas this is not thought to be certain.

CUSTOMS TYRANNY SCORED BY FRENCH

Paris Paper Suggests Sign of Statue of Liberty, "Public Barred."

Special Cable to The American. PARIS, Oct. 11.—Paris still is discussing the inanity with which the New York customs officials enforce even the most recent law.

To-day, the economic article The Journalists whether we may not soon see the allegorical lantern of the New York Statue of Liberty replaced by a flaming torch, and the motto "Public Barred."

of Davis & Maigret, discussing the new tariff law with the Sunday American correspondent to-day, observed:

"Scores Old Tariff Well." "This measure is very welcome to us. The Chamber of Commerce is, of course, in favor of freer trade, and regards the new law as an advance in the direction of freer trade. But protection should not be carried too far, and should not become prohibitive. The French people have been protesting for years against the tariff barriers which threatened to isolate her from the outside world.

"So far as France is concerned, the new law is a step in the right direction. It is a step toward the abolition of the tariff. The French people have been protesting for years against the tariff barriers which threatened to isolate her from the outside world.

Special Cable to The American. PARIS, Oct. 11.—The signing of the tariff law is a sensation here. It is satisfactory to France in a general way, but the belief is that the country may benefit by it less than other European nations.

"I was assured at the French Foreign office, in the absence of Minister Pichon, that the new tariff would be welcomed here rather as an indication of better things to come than as a sign of protection."

B. J. Shonberger, president of the Paris-American Chamber of Commerce, says: "The new tariff does not show any material reduction in the schedule covering articles of luxury. The greatest reduction is on manufactures of wool."

"Previous to 1900 France exported goods and other textiles made in France to the United States to the value of $100,000,000. The new tariff will reduce this to $50,000,000. The new tariff will reduce this to $50,000,000."

'Free Trade Achievement' Is One Comment in London

Special Cable to The American. LONDON, Oct. 11.—The newspaper editors in London have made a comment on the new tariff law. The Westminster Gazette, chief of the free trade organs among the London evening papers, says: "The new tariff law is a free trade achievement at its best. It is a free trade achievement at its best. It is a free trade achievement at its best."

"The truth is that the protectionist cause, which seemed invulnerable, was rotten. It had made the cost of living for the consumer so high that the consumer so completely at the mercy of the trusts that directly it was seriously challenged public opinion could not but rise in its defense."

"It only needed a man of courage and resolute faith to give the lead, and President Wilson has done this. He has produced the most courageous and as well as the most constructive statesman in the world to-day."

M. Charles Sauret, French Government Commissioner for Foreign Commerce, and leading exporter of dried walnuts and almonds, said: "Notwithstanding the enormous and growing increase of the Californian production, the United States, for a long time to come, depend largely for its dried fruits, walnuts and almonds on France, which exports to America millions of dollars' worth of them annually. I am therefore convinced that the reduction of the tariff on these goods is an excellent measure which must lead to an increase in the total of commercial transactions to the mutual benefit of both nations."

Italy's Wharves Crowded With Exports for the U. S.

Special Cable to The American. ROME, Oct. 11.—The Naples Matino says: "With the Underwood bill passed from not on the American market is open to our products and ready to receive them in larger quantities. Exporters who have eagerly awaited the new law now prepare to take such steps as will insure our export trade a larger share of the benefits to be derived under the new Administration."

"What a profound difference there is between the old Dingley bill and the new Underwood bill. The latter does nothing else, and we have reason to believe that the new tariff will make it possible for us to take a larger share of the benefits to be derived under the new Administration."

The Matino also prints the information that in the last two months hundreds of thousands of cases of macaroni, oils and cheese have been lying on the wharves awaiting passage of the bill, to be shipped to America.

The Venice Gazzettino, referring to the favorable impression in local commercial circles, says: "The new tariff must be considered a distinct victory for President Wilson and the best group of Democratic Representatives and Senators determined to carry out their program. Notwithstanding the opposition of the industrial interests of the country, the new tariff law is a success of the new Administration."

THE BUSIEST TOWN OF ITS SIZE IN THE WORLD--EAST POINT, GEORGIA'

EAST POINT IS MAGNET WHICH DRAWS MONEY

Merchants Who Locate There
Find Instant Success, Despite Many Live Competitors.

The busiest town of its size in the world--East Point, Ga.

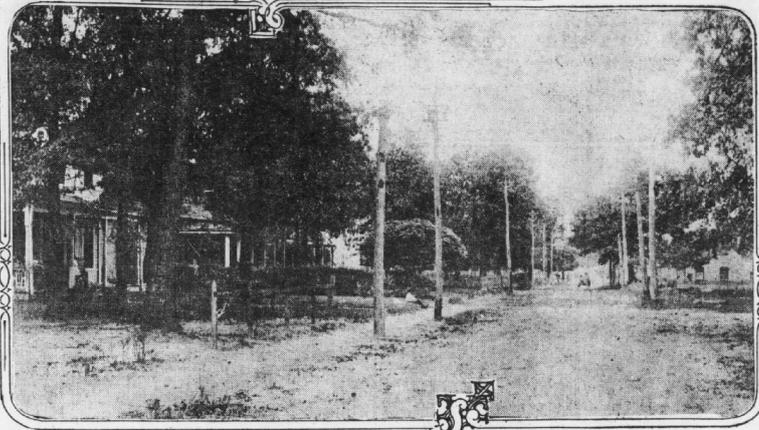

Pulsating with prosperity, humming with commerce, ablaze with industry, the western metropolis of Fulton County, this little city of commercial satisfaction is not only one of the sweet centers, but also the most remarkable from a standpoint of substantial resources.

Dotted with industries of every description, it defies the approach of "hard times." With such a varied outlay of manufacturing, even the most stringent of financial troubles could hardly result in halting the wheels of industry there. Add to this its location in the midst of a rich agricultural section, and make it a perfect residential town, and the ideal of municipalities is presented.

City Makes Everything.
It is doubtful if any one city with one-tenth the population has as varied a line of industries as East Point. There are small plants and plants of large dimensions. There are manufacturing plants of every kind from a wagon to a spool of thread, horse collars to metal cutters, saws to building supplies.

The most noticeable fact of all is that every plant in East Point is running to its full capacity, while extensions are being planned. Rumors of new plants are plentiful, and it is regarded as assured that before another twelve months pass at least three or four new concerns will locate in the town. Within the past two years half a dozen new industries have begun operation.

All Become Boosters.
Every man who has located in East Point has developed into a booster. A significant fact of the substantial foundation upon which the town rests is that a number of merchants locating here in the past three years have found instant success awaiting.

Competition has served to develop business, and the "old-timers" and "new-comers" alike have experienced the benefits of increased business.

There is money to be made by the man who has money to invest; there is a job for every able-bodied man.

Ask any man in East Point what he thinks of his town.
"The best and busiest town of its size in the world," is his instant reply.

Alimony Dodger in Peril of Jail Again

Sheriff in 'Believe Me, Xantippe,' Must Pay $1,750--Spent Half Year in Jail.

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—Theodore Roberts, who has been playing the part of the sheriff in "Believe Me, Xantippe," must pay his wife $1,750 for alimony or go to Ludlow street jail for another six months. He spent six months there and considered himself alimony-proof until Justice Delaney informed him he had made himself immune only from collection of alimony due prior to the trial of his wife's separation action.

Borrow Umbrella; Don't Take Raincoat

Washington Judge's Decision Shows That Latter Offense is More Serious.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—Chief Justice Cibaugh, of the District Supreme Court, has handed down an opinion on the mooted question, "Which is the worse crime--to steal a raincoat or to borrow an umbrella while it is raining?" He thinks that the taking of a raincoat is a trifle more heinous than borrowing an umbrella, for to-day he sent John Nelson to the penitentiary for two years for taking a raincoat without the owner's leave.

Many Masons to Get Master Degree

Henry Banks, of LaGrange, Past Master, Will Lecture Before Candidates.

One of the most interesting events in local Masonry will be the lecture of Henry Banks, of LaGrange, past grand master of the Masons of Georgia, to be delivered next Tuesday evening to a large class of candidates who will receive the degree of master mason at that communication. The ceremony will conclude at 9 o'clock and the lecture will be given at that hour. The Masons of the city and near-by towns have been invited to attend.

200 Trains Every 24 Hours Pass City at 8-Mile Pace

Every Freight Takes or Leaves Something, Every Local Has Fares for East Point.

Two hundred trains pass through East Point every 24 hours, and every train either leaves or takes something. The Central of Georgia and the Atlanta and West Point Railroads have immense trackage, the investment in steel rails alone totaling several hundred thousand dollars.

Every local train handles a large amount of travel for East Point. The travelers on the great ten and twelve coach through trains catch a wonderful view of the prosperity of the town as they move through it at an eight-mile-an-hour pace. The city fathers of the little city displayed sagacity in putting an eight-mile limit on trains for it really furnishes a sightseeing trip to East Point's industries. The traveler can not help but be forcibly struck with the prosperity of the place.

Factories Line Tracks.
The Central of Georgia sweeps around to Hapeville from East Point, while the Atlanta and West Point road curves to College Park, thus making East Point a junction. Factory after factory is to be found along each line.

Within the past two years both roads have found it necessary to increase the size of their depots as well as of their yards. All day and night switch engines are kept busy snaking out long lines of cars filled with the manufactured products of the town's alive with railroad commercial agents fairly fighting for the handling of the many heavy shipments.

Interurban Express.
An interurban express furnishes the merchants of the section with a quick means of transportation for their hurry-up orders from and to Atlanta and to each corner of "Prosperity Triangle."

A ten-minute schedule puts East Point in quick trolley connection with both Atlanta, College Park and Hapeville. The six miles to Atlanta is covered in twenty minutes.

EAST POINT, SOUTH'S NATURAL GATEWAY TO ATLANTA, HAS BIG FUTURE

GROWS RAPIDLY AS MARKET FOR GEORGIA COTTON

First Bank Eight Years Old—Now There Are Four With $140,000 Capital.

East Point is pre-eminently the city with a future. This declares Byron S. Hue, cashier of the Citizens Bank, and one of the "lives wires" in the town. It is the natural gateway from the South into Atlanta," says Mr. Hue. With its great railroad facilities and manufacturing industries, coupled with its extreme desirability as a residence town, it is sure to become a great community. In population, within a radius of two miles of the heart of the city, it now outranks any town between Atlanta and Macon and between Atlanta and Montgomery.

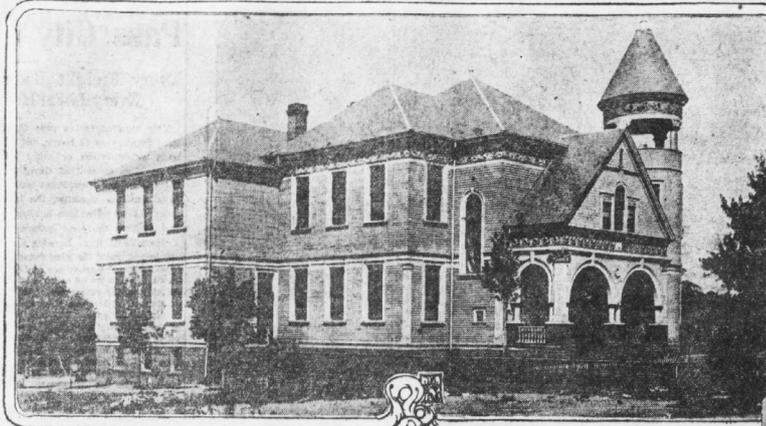

East Point is growing by leaps and bounds, hardly a week passes without the establishment of some new business. The man who grasps opportunity by the forelock and invests in East Point is sure to reap a rich reward.

Four Banks Busy.
The banking business of East Point well illustrates this phenomenal growth. It was only eight years ago that the first bank was established in this community, now we have four, the one I am connected with being the youngest of the four. While less than two years old, it has deposits of more than $100,000. The banking capital of what you have termed the "Prosperity Triangle" has grown from nothing in 1905 to more than $140,000, with deposits exceeding $225,000.

The man looking for investment location for business or for a home, need look no further than East Point, "The City With a Future."

Wants Cotton Center.
Mr. Hue is active in his efforts to make a cotton center of East Point and is starting the work by buying all the cotton he can. The movement is meeting with favor and the merchants of the town are joining with him. There has been talk for some time of establishing a cotton market in East Point and with Mr. Hue taking the initiative, the market is regarded as a certainty in the very near future.

facturing plant, it being a junction point of the Central of Georgia and Atlanta and West Point Railroads. Today there are two big wagon and buggy manufacturing there, representing an investment of $200,000.

Other industries were rapidly drawn until the total investment now totals several million dollars for this immediate territory. The city has a pay roll of $25,000 a week.

East Point started on its career of prosperity eight years ago. Its Mayors have proven its greatest boosters. W. P. Davis, R. F. Thompson, B. J. Blount, Jr. and the incumbent, A. J. McCoy, have placed the town on a firm municipal basis and have done much to add to its growth.

The town is a natural center and is the junction point of many roads. Real estate values are steadily increasing, and property which sold at a very cheap price a few years ago now is in demand at handsome prices.

Railroads Are Helping.
No town in the country is being boosted more as a manufacturing center than is East Point, the railroads entering the town having a large number of agents actively engaged in persuading manufacturers to locate there.

Its history for the past five years tells of how many merchants and manufacturers who have located there during this time have met with success and have become the town's greatest boosters.

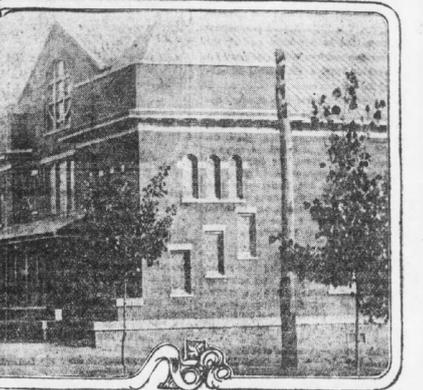

A town of wonderful resources, both in agriculture and in manufacturing, East Point has taken a wonderful spurt in the past two years, and the prediction is freely made that its future is bright and that its growth will attract the nation's attention during the years to come.

Dry Goods Man, Hardware Merchant, Both Boosters

B. G. Jones and W. A. Driver Win Remarkable Success in Just Three Years.

B. G. Jones, of the B. G. Jones Dry Goods Company, is one of the men who has selected East Point as a business location during the past three years, and no more ardent booster is to be found.

"East Point is the center of things commercially, business is good and all that a man needs to progress is to be possessed of energy," said he. "The amount of business transacted in this end of Fulton County is im-large amount of money is invested in its many manufacturing plants and indications are that quite a number of new ones will locate here during the next year."

Success came to W. A. Driver when he decided upon East Point for a place in which to establish a hardware business. It was two years ago that he made this decision. To-day his concern, the Driver Hardware Company, ranks among the best in the district. He began business January 16, 1910, with a capital of $2,850. The firm is carrying a $10,000 stock today, while the volume of business is heavy.

"I don't suppose anyone has any more right to boost East Point than I have," said Mr. Driver. "I absolutely believe it to be the best town of its size in the country. Of course, a man must work, and work hard, to achieve success, but the man with energy can surely win a way to a competence by locating here."

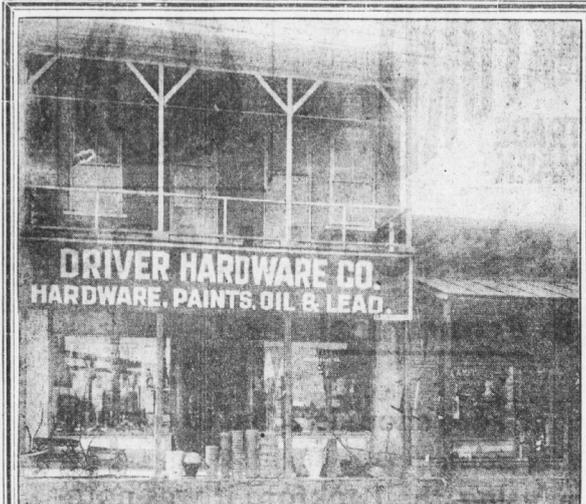

Atlanta Germans To Celebrate "Day"

The speakers will be Messrs. Herr, Steinichen, E. Kottz, F. Rademacher and Pastor Nussmann. The members of the committee of arrangements are Theodore Cassiver, George Mau, Otto Klingenberg, George Hertlein, Julius Bruckner, Charles Hirsch, Philip Meyer and John Pappo. The dance selections will be rendered by the Wedemeyer orchestra.

A Hardware Store That Lives Up To Its Name

When this store was opened for business, there was one aim at which we strived—one purpose we had in view, and that was to build up a business that would amount to something more than the business of the common run of hardware stores amounts to. We have the largest stock of everything carried by up-to-date hardware stores. We buy in large quantities, thus enabling us to sell for the lowest possible prices; and we figure that low prices and quick sales is the best business policy.

It matters not what you want, if it is kept by hardware stores that conduct their business on the "up-to-the-minute" policy, then you may expect to find it here.

The Banks of East Point an Important Factor in City's Growth.

The Citizens Bank of East Point

—We have always believed it to be the one proper function of a bank that it should seek to be conservative along all lines that legitimately belong to it.

—We thoroughly appreciate the fact that the success of the CITIZENS BANK will be greater as it tends to strengthen the business men and manufacturing interests of East Point, for upon this the advancement of "the manufacturing heart of Atlanta" must depend.

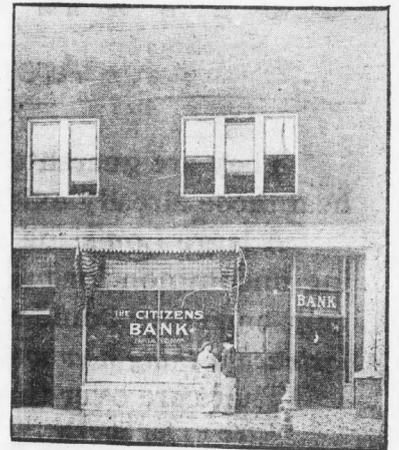

—We believe that the ideal banker is the one who is on the same terms of close and personal intimacy with his customers in relation to their financial affairs as is the physician in relation to one's personal physical condition, or the lawyer to one's legal matters, and we endeavor to encourage this idea with our depositors and all those with whom we do business.

—The CITIZENS BANK has a cash capital of $50,000; we have deposits amounting to more than $90,000; and every investment on our books will stand the rigid, acid test of being sound and conservative. We are able to do this only by conducting our business along clean and legitimate lines.

—We have made the CITIZENS BANK exactly the kind of bank East Point should have. We realize that your money on deposit with us makes us your trustee, not only legally, but morally, and it is the moral side of the banking business that is safeguarded by us.

—We want the people of East Point to feel that this is their institution—we want you to feel that the CITIZENS BANK is YOUR BANK, and that it is being maintained for you and for the advancement of East Point, as well as for the advancement of manufacturing interests, large and small, that go to make East Point great.

—We solicit your account, whether large or small, and you will be extended every courtesy consistent with the principles of good banking.

MAXIM TO HUSH NOISE AND MAKE DEAF HEAR

Maxim's Electric Machine Sheds Silence Like Lamp Casts Light—Price Within Reach—First Test in Hospital.

His 'Sounder' Jars Rusty Mechanism of Ear Into Activity—Tells How Bath Tub Furnished the Inspiration for Gun Muffler.

In less than one year Hiram Percy Maxim, inventor of the Maxim gun, is going to hush every unpolluted noise in Atlanta, Boston, New York, Chicago, or any other place. The cars and trains will go on under the wheels, the wheels will rattle, whistles will shriek, cries of hawkers and children will fill the streets; but you, sitting at home in your office, in a railway train, or in your car, will hear none of this. The cars will neither rattle nor thunder. The streets will bear only dead silence to the ears of a Maxim. It is a matter of weeks before the inventor of the Maxim gun, Hiram Percy Maxim, son of Hiram Maxim, will demonstrate publicly by first installing it in the ward of a New York hospital. The moment it is placed in this ward every outside noise heard there will cease.

The secret of the wizard's invention, which is to hush the noise of the world, is simple. The human ear receives sound vibrations in the form of waves that travel through the air at the rate of 1,100 feet per second. The vibrations of the air are of the same nature as the vibrations of the string of a piano. The vibrations of the string are of the same nature as the vibrations of the air. The vibrations of the air are of the same nature as the vibrations of the string of a piano. The vibrations of the string are of the same nature as the vibrations of the air.

Important as Fresh Air. "It is so important that we have quiet as that we have fresh air," said Mr. Maxim, smiling up at a front corner of his house and running his fingers abstractedly through his thick gray-black hair. "And I'm going to make the world quiet."

Now let me cite an example to bring you and your readers nearer to what I am getting at. The eye is sensitive to light vibrations within a certain range. But light exists beyond that range. At the foot of the scale of the prismatic colors is the indistinguishable ultra red; at the top is the ultra violet. It is possible to take photographs with the aid of these ultra rays though they convey no sensation of light to our eyes. The red is too low; the violet too high.

The universal silence is based upon exactly the same principle applied to sound. The ear is sensitive to certain sound vibrations within a certain range. Beyond that range we hear no sound though sound exists there.

WHAT THE MAXIM UNIVERSAL SILENCER DOES IS TO REMOVE SOUND VIBRATIONS SO THAT THEY ARE NO LONGER AUDIBLE TO THE EAR. This modification builds up, as it were, a screen of silence between the ear and sound—that is, the silencer raises the vibrations of ordinary noises above the range of hearing by so increasing the sound vibrations from those notes that they become undetectable to the ear.

If you raise the vibrations of the street hum from 400 per second to 500 per second, then you can not hear the noise of the street, for, as I have said, the normal ear can not detect sound that produces above 20,000 vibrations the second. My universal silencer raises the vibrations in exactly this way.

It is a little electric device not dissimilar to an electric lamp and like it is attached by a cord to an electric plug. Instead of shedding light it sheds silence. Now, when you go home, you press a button or turn a switch and get light, heat or air (with your electric fan).

large New York hospital. It will cover the range of noise from the worst to the least troublesome. With a silencer on your table, you may live twenty feet from the thunder of the elevated trains and never hear them when they pass. It will even be possible to carry silence about with you in your pocket on the street. If you desire to be silent in your car, a portable device carried in your hand or perhaps placed on your coat. A simple lever that device moved backward and forward will enable you to will to lessen or widen the range of sound that you may desire.

"Now, let me tell of another device which is a kind of product of the silencer and which will, I believe, prove a tremendous boon to a certain class of deaf persons. I call it the Maxim sounder. It will enable all persons who can now distinguish sound when listening at a telephone receiver or when riding on trains or in street cars but who, otherwise, can not hear—to enjoy the privileges well without the use of a fan for the teeth or any other phonic device such as is now considered so embarrassing to both the deaf and those who attempt conversation with them. The vibrations produced by the shaking of the street car or the railway train or in the telephone receiver are very intense. The fact that these otherwise deaf persons hear in a street car or at the telephone is because their auditory mechanism has been set in motion by these intense vibrations, and once being set in motion, they are enabled to carry through ordinary sound vibrations. The auditory mechanism of a deaf person of this class is like a tight bearing with a lot of friction. Once started it will run with but little power; the difficulty is to get it started. Now if we can furnish a device that will shake those partly defective or slow starting ear mechanisms, including the bones of the skull around the ear, into action, it is not difficult to keep them running. It is not necessary to produce a violent shock or a loud sound to do this.

"Perhaps it will be of interest if I tell how I came finally to the longing for a device for silencing noise. I will tell briefly about the gun silencer. That, as you know, has extracted all noise when a gun was fired. The noise was caused by the sudden vibration of the powder gases. My problem was to stop that noise by checking the gas in some way.

"I searched for three years for a way to check the gas and stop the bullet. I had to have a hole for the bullet to pass through and keep the gas in the gun. It was on the principle of the man who was looking for a coal hole that would be impervious to the legs of gasers and yet pervious to the coal. Just as a man does when he has a great want, I compared every phenomenon of my daily life seeking for the clue to my problem. One morning when I was taking a bath I noticed, after I had pulled out the plug in the bath tub, that the water, seeping down, left a hole in the water. The water going round and round rapidly was retarded from running out and there was the hole for my bullet. It gave me the very idea that I wanted.

"The principle of the gun silencer, which is a steel cylinder fixed upon the muzzle of the gun, was based upon that phenomenon. I filled the chamber of the silencer with a series of spiral white chambers which caught the gases as they burst from the gun, and one after another whirled the gases round vigorously. In the center I provided a hole for the bullet to pass through, but considerably larger than the bullet. The gases had no escape except through this central hole. Being central, they could not possibly get out until they had slowed down. This meant that they must come out slowly and consequently noiselessly. And the idea worked out to a charm.

"The new automobile silencer is a gun silencer enlarged. Mr. Maxim is also the inventor of the marine silencer, so commonly used on motor boats. He continues his investigations to the study and perfection of silencing devices.

"The center I provided a hole for the bullet to pass through, but considerably larger than the bullet. The gases had no escape except through this central hole. Being central, they could not possibly get out until they had slowed down. This meant that they must come out slowly and consequently noiselessly. And the idea worked out to a charm.

If Beau Brummel Came to Atlanta To-day

he would find his heart's true ideals in dress expressed in EISEMAN BROS.' fashionable Clothes, Hats and Shoes----

HE WOULD, moreover, find in the ensemble of models the distinctive "touch" of style delineations his aristocratic tastes demanded----

THE "Beau" was an idealist--not an extremist. He detested "frillery" and "foppery"---the bizarre and the spectacular; his standard of dress DEMANDED ABSOLUTELY CORRECT FORM, the PERFECTION OF TAILORING, and the minute niceties of fitting----

THE EISEMAN BROS. Clothes are built to fill the highest expectations of the "Beau Brummels" of to-day---the young men who are as keen for style, and as advanced in their ideas, as the immortal "Beau" ever dreamed of being---

The "Beau" spent many a wearisome hour battling with tailors for his style rights— You have no such "wearable warfare to wage"— Your clothes can be selected here, in the enjoyment of instant demonstration— Select the SUIT that "suits" you best— It is ready for you to try on and wear; and you will wear it with the pleasant and reassuring consciousness that "no Beau on the street will have you beat" for "GOOD APPEARANCES"—and at PRICES for "GOOD APPEARANCES" would have considered a "drollery" in moderation.

'A PLEASURE TO BOOST WORLD'S BUSIEST CITY,' SAYS MAYOR A. J. M'COY

FACTORIES AT HIGHEST SPEED IN EAST POINT

Industries Varied and Every Plant Works to Its Full Capacity All Year.

Boosting East Point is the most delightful business in the world, according to Mayor A. J. McCoy.

A person can't stay in this town an hour without turning into an enthusiastic booster," he declared. "All that is necessary is to take a 30-minute walk around the town and one immediately becomes struck with the fact that it is just about the busiest town to be found anywhere.

To be on the inside of the business here and have an intimate knowledge of just what is going on only serves to make a man really appreciate the town and its possibilities at the wonderful resources here. Without a doubt, East Point is the liveliest manufacturing city of its class in the world; the industries are varied, and each plant is operating to its full capacity.

Handsome Homes Building. As a residential section it is rapidly coming to the fore. Many pieces of high-class residential property have been sold recently, and a number of handsome dwellings are either in course of construction or being planned.

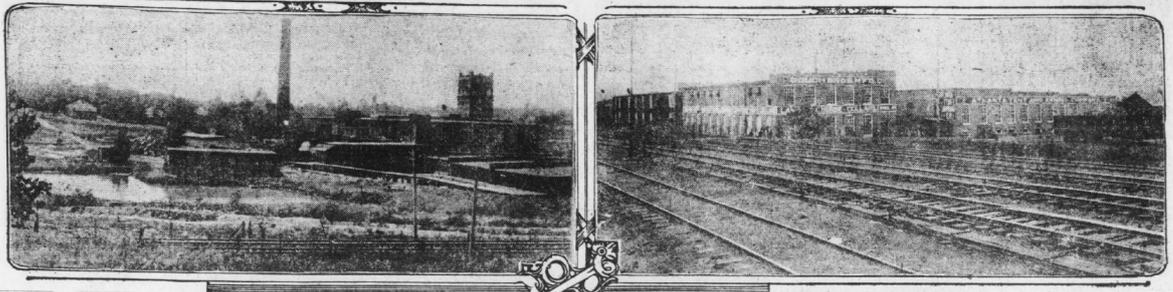

So far as the city's affairs are concerned, I don't think there is another town in the world in better shape than what I have been mentioning a short time ago, but under the guidance of my predecessors East Point has made wonderful progress. "The city owns both its waterworks and its electric plants, and works on a paying basis. The water is the purest Mother Nature can furnish, coming from artesian wells that are 200 to 400 feet in depth. We have four wells and are prospecting now to go even deeper. We have a bountiful supply of water.

We have a splendid fire department, using automobile apparatus; a superb public school system, and a city department. The property of the city already is of greater value than its bonded indebtedness, which is less than $100,000. Our available value of two and three-quarter million dollars would allow us a bond issue of more than $200,000.

Basis is Solid. Everything in East Point is on a permanent and steady boom. New industries and businesses are coming in every order, and all are doing well. "I have been in East Point but a few years, but during that time I have learned that it is the most remarkable town of its size in the world, with a future so bright that it will not be a question of annexing Atlanta within a few short years. "East Point is the busiest town in the world."

Atlanta Utility Works Win Success

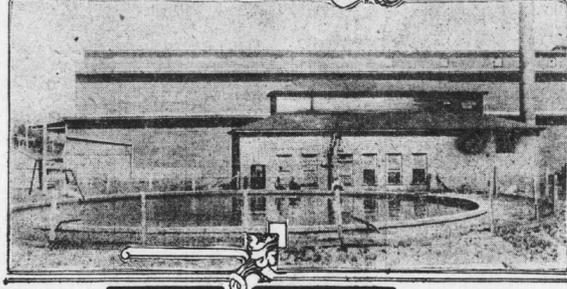

"A Square Deal" Is Its Motto, and Progress Has Been Rapid and Sustained.

With "A Square Deal" as the motto, Dan Lyle and E. H. Thompson began the manufacture of the Winder electro magnet for use on cotton seed hoppers in 1905. This machine attracted the attention of the oil mills, and shortly after this they began the manufacture of separating machinery and other specialties for their use.

After a reorganization a few years since under the name of Atlanta Utility Works, improvements were instituted and a complete line of fertilizer, mixing and sacking machinery was added, and the increased demands for utility machinery made it necessary to enlarge and improve until to-day there is not a plant in this field of industry that is better equipped to meet demands than the Atlanta Utility Works.

A competent engineering department, composed of mechanical and electrical engineers of long and practical experience, is maintained. The officers of the Atlanta Utility Works are: President, Walter D. B.S.M.E., and president, J. V. Rogers. The engineering department is composed of W. D. Nash, B.S.M.E., and oil mill engineering, Tom R. Brooke, oil mill engineering, E. K. Thompson, B.S.M.E., H. J. Green, B.S.M.E.

Belief in integrity and impartial advice is the base on which this company has built, and the motto, "A Square Deal," has been the vehicle on which they have made the race for supremacy and have won.

Realty Men Wearing Broadest of Smiles

In Hustling Little Town, They See Future Hugs, Busting Industrial Center.

The men who are wearing the broadest smiles in East Point are the real estate dealers, for in the hustling little town they can see a future huge, bustling city, brimming full of prosperity and ever widening its borders. Real estate values have increased at a remarkable rate, but they have barely started yet, according to the dealers. There have been several instances of startling increases in value. In a number of cases parcels of property have been sold at many times the purchase price of a few years ago. Heavy offers have been refused in many instances.

Weatherholt Will Sell All Piano Stock

Head of Musical House Announces That Store Will Be Closed After Sale.

Considerable interest was manifested in business circles Saturday by the announcement of T. E. Weatherholt, well-known piano man and president of the Weatherholt Piano Company, that he had been forced to close his doors. The announcement is to the effect that the entire stock of pianos and player-pianos of the Weatherholt Company will be thrown on the market Monday, regardless of price, and sold out.

Mr. Weatherholt has also offered for sale the lease to his store at No. 72 North Broad street. The Weatherholt Company has been the Southern distributor for Steger & Sons, one of the largest and strongest piano manufacturing concerns in the world. No reason could be obtained from Mr. Weatherholt Saturday for the closing of his store and the throwing of his large stock on the market.

The officers of the company are Garnett McMillan, president and general manager; James F. Armstrong, secretary; Walter D. Couch, secretary and assistant treasurer. The offices are at 714 Peters Building.

$10,000 To Be Spent at Lakewood Park

New Bathhouses, Filtration Plant and Roadway Are Planned for Resort.

Lakewood Park will be made into a summer resort as popular as Piedmont, if plans formulated by the Park Board are carried out. General Manager Dan Carey was instructed to employ an engineer to make a profile of the proposed road around the lake.

The contemplated improvements include the erection of bathhouses and a filtration plant in connection with the proposed road around the lake. The Park Board expects to ask the County Board for $10,000 and the county board for $5,000 next year in order to carry out the proposed improvements.

New Building Fences Under Woodward Ban

Mayor Orders Chief to See That Streets Are Not Further Obstructed.

Mayor Woodward has made a protest against blocking streets for the construction of buildings by vetoing the resolution of Council sanctioning the erection of a fence in the street around the building of the A. W. Alston estate at the corner of Broad and Alabama streets.

He called Chief Beavers over the phone and ordered him to have the fence torn down on the grounds that the contractor had exceeded his rights in putting the fence beyond the sidewalk.

Demonstrators Plan Big Farm Crusade

U. S. Experts and Georgia Agents Meet to Give Impetus to Agriculture.

Agriculture in Georgia promises to take on a new meaning if the plan formulated at the meeting of the demonstration agents of the United States Department of Agriculture and State College of Agriculture, just held at the State Capitol, receive the cooperation of the planters and are carried out to effect.

Forty demonstration agents from North Georgia were in attendance at the meeting which was presided over by Dr. J. Phil Campbell. A similar gathering of demonstrators who are engaged in South Georgia will be held in Macon during the next week of the State Fair, where plans for the betterment of agricultural conditions in South Georgia will be worked out.

An effort is to be made to get a larger yield per acre of all crops planted in Georgia through the use of commercial fertilizer applied in sufficient quantities to restore to the land the plant food removed each year by the growing crops.

Orders to Ask Supreme Court to Reverse Verdict Given J. L. Riley.

It was learned Saturday that the Royal Arcanum would appeal to the Supreme Court against the decision of the Superior Court in awarding to J. L. Riley $1200 insurance on his father, Edward S. Riley.

RAILROADS AID IN DEVELOPING FACTORY SITES

Central of Georgia and West Point Have Great Plans for West Fulton.

Realizing the gold mine which they have in East Point, both the Central of Georgia Railway and the Atlanta and West Point Railroad are laying plans to make it one of the greatest manufacturing centers in the world. Both roads have accumulated large holdings of valuable lands, which they will develop as manufacturing sites. To the west of East Point the Central of Georgia has acquired 1,000 acres stretching along a course of seven miles to the Chattahoochee River. Huge yards will be established here while surveys for the tracks are being made in a manner which will make the land the most suitable for factories.

The Central has taken its initial step in actual opening up of this area. A spur track has been laid across the tracks of the Georgia Railway and Power Company and the Atlanta Boulevard but a few hundred yards from the business heart of East Point. Space for 200 new industries will be provided here.

Both the Central and Atlanta and West Point have agents busy laying before manufacturers the desirability of locating at East Point. The accessibility to Atlanta and superb rail-road facilities, which puts East Point in line for direct and rapid shipment to any part of the country, make the town ideal from a manufacturing standpoint.

USE OF LIQUID AIR SEEN FOR DOMESTIC REFRIGERATION

CHICAGO, Oct. 11.—Development of processes of manufacture of liquefied air, so that it will be available for domestic refrigeration, was explained by Georges Claude, of Paris, in a lecture here. It will be possible within a few years, M. Claude predicted for municipal ice plants to pipe liquid air into homes for the use of householders in their refrigerators at a cost low enough to make the service popular.

DIXIE AUTOISTS TO POUR IN HERE FOR BIG SHOW

More Cars Than Have Ever Before Been Assembled in South To Be Seen.

More automobiles than were ever before gathered in a Southern city at one time will be seen in Atlanta between November 8 and 15, the week of the Great Southern Automobile Show. Not only the newest models from the principal factories will be shown, but every garage in Atlanta will be filled with tourists' cars driven in from Southern cities. Touring parties are being organized in Savannah, Marion, Augusta, Albany, Athens and a number of towns in other States, under the direction of the local enthusiasts. Letters to members of the local show committee asking for garage reservations indicate that hundreds of private owners will drive over Georgia's good roads to the show. Wylie West, one of the five wives of the auto show committee of the Atlanta Automobile and Accessory Association, returned Saturday from Detroit, where he attended the National Good Roads Convention, and incidentally boosted Atlanta and the auto show.

He says the fame of the annual Atlanta exhibit has reached manufacturers in the West and that most of them count on the Atlanta show as the first opportunity to display their new ideas. The Atlanta show brings an exhibition of 1914 designs, two months before the great exhibits in New York and Chicago, which are given in January.

The show this year will be of far more than usual interest to the everyday man and woman who are "not in the auto market," for it brings Sousa's famous band. Next to the annual grand opera season, the coming of Sousa will be the great musical event of the year, and if the attendance is up to expectations it is the intention of the automobile association to have a grand band every year. Sousa brought his 32 musicians to Atlanta for a concert performance a few years ago, and drew a big audience, but he is particularly remembered for his session at the Cotton States Exposition, when he wrote the "King Cotton March" in honor of Atlanta.

AMBULANCES ARE NEEDED AT GRADY HOSPITAL

Superintendent Declares He Had No Vehicle to Send for Injured Blakely Boy.

Dr. William B. Sumnerall, superintendent of Grady Hospital, made an explanation Saturday of what appeared to be neglect of duty on the part of hospital attendants in the case of 12-year-old John Blakely, of No. 17 Parcell street, who was run down and seriously injured Friday night by an Edgewood avenue trolley car. Clarence Morgan, an Atlanta business man, was one of the first to go to the aid of the injured lad and he complained Saturday that in spite of all his importunities that the Grady Hospital refused to send an ambulance. He was told, he said, to call up the Atlanta Hospital and ask for an ambulance. A private automobile later happened along and took the boy to the Atlanta Hospital. Dr. Sumnerall said in explanation that he had made a rigid investigation and had found that both of the Grady ambulances were out on calls at the time and that it was impossible to comply with Mr. Morgan's request. He asserted that as soon as one of the ambulances returned it was sent out, but that the boy by this time had been taken to the other institution. The Grady superintendent declared that the incident emphasized the need of more ambulances for the hospital. Young Blakely was reported as resting easily last night at the Atlanta Hospital. He suffered a compound fracture in both legs.

Doctor Cures Thief Who Robbed Him

CINCINNATI, Oct. 11.—Official notice from the Circuit Court of Newport, Ky., of disposal of charges against Private Thomas Byers, Company A, United States Infantry, alone is lacking for his discharge from Spewer Hospital. Byers was indicted on a charge of grand larceny for stealing from a Newport physician's residence. The doctor found that blood clot had formed on Byers' brain. He operated on the soldier and now the man says he does not remember his misdeeds.

Editor Helps Bring Cotton to Market

East Point News Consistently Aids Development of City as Big Crop Center.

East Point's 100 per cent friend is M. C. Thompson, editor of The East Point News, one of the latest weeklies published in the State. He has been one of the strongest enthusiasts for making East Point a cotton market and his efforts are bearing fruit. In addition to publishing his paper he does a general printing business, and, like others in East Point, is enjoying prosperity. Preparations are now under way for increasing the business greatly. "Old East Point is booming right along," said Mr. Thompson. "Did you ever see such a busy town in your life? Everyone you see on the streets is moving about lively, but you don't get to see much of our population because they are so busy with their labor. All of the various industries are running at full capacity and everyone is doing a good business. "This is the best and busiest town in the world, and there is no one spot in this whole universe that has as bright outlook as it has. I am for East Point first, last and all the time, for business or home, and there are 5,000 other people out here just like me."

Coal Is Barometer Of Town's Business

Pioneer Fuel Dealer of West Point Metropolis Argues Boom Times for His Trade.

The coal man is the real barometer of whether times are good or bad, and the fact that the coal business of H. E. Johnson, pioneer coal dealer in East Point, has continued to grow despite hot competition, is regarded as a splendid illustration of East Point's prosperity. "During the several years I have been in business in East Point I have had a splendid opportunity to observe the growth of the town," said Mr. Johnson. "It is growing at a remarkable rate, so fast, in fact, that I doubt if but few of the residents of East Point are really aware of the extent of it. "Many new concerns have sprung up here within the last two years, while others are contemplating coming here. My business has increased by a splendid per cent each year despite competition which has sprung up. "The town is progressing in every way, both in business houses and residences. A great number of people have moved to East Point in the last few months, and more are moving here each day. I look forward to the day when East Point will be the very hub of business in Fulton County."

SLATON URGES STATE EXHIBIT AT PANAMA CANAL FAIR

Wants Commercial Bodies to Unite to Show World Georgia's Matchless Resources.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Will Georgia have an exhibit at the Panama Exposition in San Francisco in 1915?

Will Georgia have a building that will do her credit, that visitors to the big show may inspect the many exhibits this State may set up therein, for her own future, greatness and glory?

Surely, if the Panama Canal is of importance to any people, any community, it is of the highest and most far-reaching importance to the South.

It is of importance to the South, it is, of course, of supreme importance to Georgia.

Governor Slaton announces in advance his entire and hearty sympathetic work inaugurated with a view to Georgia's proper representation in San Francisco in 1915.

Governor Urges an Exhibit.

"It will never do," said the Governor, "to discuss the importance of Georgia for Georgia not to have a building of her own, to show her matchless products, agricultural and otherwise, to the world."

"I hope the public may be awakened to the vast importance of this matter. I stand ready and willing to co-operate to the limit of my personal and official authority and influence."

Charles J. Haden, president of the recently organized State Chamber of Commerce, feels the same way about it.

"I propose to make this matter of a State exhibit at San Francisco an object of my best endeavor," said Mr. Haden.

"I hope to interest the State Chamber in it and through the State Chamber every county in the State, Georgia has a tremendous interest in the Panama Canal. Its opening likely will add millions to the wealth of the South. Georgia must be on hand in San Francisco to let glorious truth triumph here, to be known of all men!"

Governor Desires Products.

Georgia no longer is an agricultural State only. She is the largest State in the East of the Mississippi River, and she stood fourth in agricultural products in the United States in 1911. Her stock farms, her plantations, her enterprises have multiplied amazingly within the past twenty years, and still there are thousands who think and think rightly that Georgia is a manufacturing State yet is very much in her infancy.

(In Georgia soil may be grown any and everything without one important exception, that may be grown in the State.)

Governor Slaton, commenting upon the Panama Exposition, said:

"Georgia farmers supply material to workers in Panama, her marble quarries furnish material for magnificent buildings everywhere, notably for the new Capitol of Minnesota not long before that for a handsome public building in Philadelphia; she has the only abundant source of magnificent granite in the whole world."

Sounds Praise of Atlanta.

"Georgia's location makes supply centers of a quality everywhere, and a quality everywhere, her cotton is a tremendous factor in the production of goods in the world; her agricultural resources are incomparable; her stock farms are the second largest mule market in the world; her capital is the greatest city in the South."

There is now going on in Barrow County a splendid county fair, there will be dozens of them held in Georgia this fall. The little Barrow fair, relatively small and inconspicuous beside a world's exposition, such as the one in San Francisco, is a creditable show at the best.

From the dozens of county fairs to be held in Georgia, that magnificent exhibit could be framed up for San Francisco in 1915.

"But this Georgia exhibit must be assembled through the cooperation of individuals and through trades and commercial bodies. Georgia's Constitution prohibits Georgia from making direct appropriations to exhibits such as this must be. If the State Chamber of Commerce will interest the counties and the local trade bodies in Georgia, arouse our citizens to a realization of the great importance of this work, that there will be no difficulty in the way."

Thinks $50,000 Enough.

"I do not know, but should say that a creditable and effective showing might be made with $50,000, maybe less, of that I am not sure. It trades bodies generally will back the movement. Georgia might exhibit her agricultural department as part of the exhibit at San Francisco. This is a problem that necessarily must be worked out. I hope the movement will be put in motion promptly."

There is now a State commission of this matter in hand, authorized by the Legislature. I take it the Legislature meant business when it authorized this commission. It is made up of good men and true—appointed by Governor Brown.

If this commission will arouse various organizations, will arouse themselves to make such a showing, the legislative commission will be ready to make such a showing as they see fit in the meantime. Let's all think about the big show coming in San Francisco in 1915. To be in honor of the completion of the Panama Canal, and resolve that the Georgia exhibit shall be represented there as she should be."

Convention Over; Where Are Atlanta's Bankers? Stay-at-Homes Want to Hear Why Richmond Won

Miss Edna Brundage, her father, F. B. Brundage (in the center), and Ernest Woodruff snatched at the Boston convention of the American Bankers' Association, where they put forth their most loyal and enthusiastic efforts to get the 1914 meeting for Atlanta.

Plan to "Page" Polo Grounds Decried—Not Even Bankers Could Afford Seats.

Where are the Atlanta bankers? The Boston convention ended Thursday, Atlanta, as so proudly pointed out, and so often, is centrally located. The only a day and night ride from Boston.

Presumably there is nothing more to "do" in Boston, where, from private advices received here, everything had been thoroughly "done" by Thursday.

But of all the delegates who represented Atlanta at the American Bankers Association meeting, not one was back at the Polo Grounds last night. The only day-at-home was to know the "inside" of the question, which sent the convention to Richmond next year. Was it really the "inside" argument? They watched all through Saturday's short session for their returning brethren. None appeared.

Where are they?

Someone suggested that the Polo Grounds be "paged" for Atlanta—could even be a banker afford to buy last-minute seats at the World's Series?

Explanation are in order.

The new chamber will be entirely reorganized.

AUGUSTA FAIR IS ASSURED OF MANY EXHIBITS

Auto Races, Georgia-Clemson Football Game and Other Big Attractions Booked.

AGUSTA, Oct. 11.—In less than a month the Georgia-Clemson Fair will begin its eighth annual exhibition. During the next few weeks Secretary Beane and his assistants will work day and night to get everything in readiness for the opening.

With the Georgia-Clemson Road Congress, the annual exhibition of the Augusta Poultry Association, exhibits by half a dozen agricultural clubs of the Savannah River Valley, the annual Georgia-Clemson football game and a large number of other attractive features, the fair promises to be the greatest ever held in this section.

Instead of horse races there will be automobile races this year. The fair association has lost money at each annual exhibition of horse racing. Several thousand dollars have been expended in putting on these races, and very little money has been received in return. It was finally decided to discontinue horse racing altogether.

This year the highway will be in a much more advantageous position than ever before, being located in the town main building and the live stock building.

Secretary Beane is receiving assurances from all over this section of the country that there will be a large number of cows, hogs, goats and sheep exhibited.

County Too Poor to Pay for Post-mortem

Mystery Surrounding Death of David Weeks, Valdosta Farmer, Is Still Unsettled.

VALDOSTA, Oct. 11.—The mystery surrounding the death of David Weeks, a young farmer, whose body was found floating in a pool of water near the tracks of the Georgia and Florida Railroad, six miles south of Valdosta, last Sunday, remains unsolved.

It developed to-day that the stomach of the dead man, which was removed and reported to have been in a solid vessel in a safe at the county courthouse, was not in a state of perfect economy and perfect health, as the Board of County Commissioners is given as the reason for failing to forward the organ to Atlanta, the commissioners not feeling inclined to pay the expense.

COLUMBUS ALL WROUGHT UP; 3 CONTESTS NEAR

Waterworks Bonds, Commission Government and Regular City Elections Impending.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 11.—At present Columbus is in a turmoil over the waterworks bond election to be held October 15, it is that will not hold the city here for the year.

On December 10 the people of the city will pass on the question of adopting a commission form of government, and it is expected that the commission government campaign will be thrown open on Monday following the bond election.

Another campaign to be launched along with the commission government will be that of candidates for Mayor and Aldermen. Under the city charter an election must be held December 15 for the purpose of nominating a Mayor and eight Aldermen, and as there will only be three days between the commission government election and that of Mayor and Aldermen, it would not leave sufficient time in which a campaign could be waged for the city officials.

Among those mentioned for Mayor are Alderman Charles W. Mizell of the Eighth Ward, a prominent merchant of the city, who has been in Council for six years, and Alderman Robert Reid, of the Fifth Ward, who is completing his second term as Alderman. Mr. Reid is a druggist.

EAST POINT, COLLEGE PARK AND HAPEVILLE FORM GREAT TRIUMVIRATE

FULTON COUNTY HAS TRIANGLE OF PROSPERITY

Three Busy Cities, Each Two Miles From the Others, Make Name Appropriate.

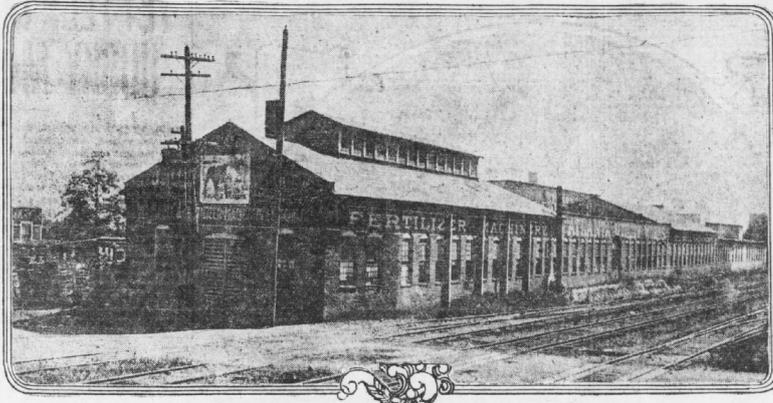

The geographical location of East Point is unique. If it had not been a single industry, it still would be an important center, for it stands as the key to Fulton County's "Prosperity Triangle," composed of East Point, College Park and Hapeville. These three towns form a triangle, each town two miles from the other. College Park lies to the northwest and Hapeville to the southwest of East Point, which forms the gateway to Atlanta. This section has a population of 10,000 and is one of the richest agricultural territories of the State.

It is dotted with colonial homes. Within its bounds are famous institutions of learning. Poor farmers are an unknown quantity. The old-timers of the district are people of breeding; the newcomers are a substantial lot, checkfull of common sense and equally well bred. A smooth 60-foot boulevard connects East Point with Atlanta, another with College Park and a third with Hapeville. There is electric illumination as well as steam road connection with all three. There are roads to every section of the county from East Point.

Georgia Congressman Takes Exception to Language of Representative Mondell, of Wyoming.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—The House had a moment of excitement to-day when Representative Mondell, of Wyoming, said that the position taken by Representative Bartlett, of Georgia, as to Commerce Court legislation "gave the lie to his protestations." Mr. Bartlett jumped to his feet with a demand that Mr. Mondell withdraw the word lie. Mr. Mondell admitted that his choice had been unfortunate, but insisted that Mr. Bartlett's attitude did not accord with his statement in regard to certain legislation. Mr. Bartlett accepted this form of criticism and the incident was closed.

It was recommended that churches try this plan, adopted already in some cities, to check the immorality which is an outgrowth of the poor home.

THE PHILADELPHIA ATHLETICS

Two Exciting Plays in Third Game of Series Between Giants and Athletics

HELD BACK BY WOODWARD, DEKHEIMER AND MONTAGUE

By Damon Runyon.
NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—They do come back sometimes. Eddie Plank, the oldest pitcher in service, proved it. The veteran outpitched the Philadelphia Athletics to a score of 10 to 3 in the Philadelphia grounds this afternoon, beating the New York Giants in the first game of the series by a score of 15 to 1. Thousands of Philadelphia fans lined out on the field as Larry Doyle was retired in the final inning, and looking on the "Victory Gate," they bore him in triumph from the field. A new feature that had marked the great Christy Mathewson, many doubted that Plank, 42 years old and 22 years a big league pitcher—could return after such a short rest, but the box score shows the game pitched with melody was again massed on the field in front of the Giant bench and the crowd cheered one popular air after another from his men, while the crowd whistled and sang in accompaniment. Three young men armed with megaphones mounted the concrete roof of the Giant camp and bordered the multitude with songs.

The crowd seemed somewhat depressed compared to the mental attitude of previous crowds and it did not seem to be in the mood for a

HATTANOOGA, TENN., Oct. 11.
 Restraint by Heisman to straight football alone and denied the use of their trick plays and also the forward pass, the Tech's Yellow Jackets literally annihilated the Moccasin here this afternoon.

The final score was 71 to 5. Chattanooga taking the Tech's unwarranted the first few minutes of play and rushing over a counter which was set up by their only really successful forward pass. The goal was missed in invading Tech's goal line.

Againe was opposed by Mathewson, and again the big baseball star of Manhattan pitched a great game, but before the amazing cross-fire of the old side-winder the Giants hung behind when they needed the pinch.

It was a game lacking in the spectacular features that had marked nearly all of the other four encounters in the series. The Athletics fought a carefully planned battle against "Big Six," a plan apparently based on the idea of stalling the first ball he pitched at them.

Stuffer's crew apparently spent its energy, and tired and crippled by the end of the first quarter, who went out with a broken nose, the locals, few but little opposition honorarily to Tech's terrific and amazing at Smith recovered the ball for Tech on an attempt for a place kick of the 22-yard line. Chattanooga failed to gain by scrimmage and when Hampton punted Cushman ran 25 yards through the line and was set for a touchdown. Press kicked the goal. Score: Tech, 16; Chattanooga, 6.

Plank Always Steady.

Plank pitched a great game to finish. While the game passed off in a quiet, dignified manner, the veteran had to be as good as new.

Following a third quarter kick-off, Johnson, Thompson, Frens and Alexander kicked the ball to the 20-yard line in eight plays. Cook knocked Spencer under the nose, promptly punted and Flieder returned the ball to the 20-yard line. Tech was penalized for holding, but Cushman and Flieder went to the three-

The Athletics had the better team. They not only had the better team in this encounter, but one of the best teams in the game. Handicapped as they were by injuries, the Giants did well to get the game out of five.

Plank Always Steady.

Breaks Against Giants.
 Mathewson, several years younger than Plank, was the less a veteran, worked methodically on the suggestion of Mack Grandall in a fashion that showed how well he had studied them since he first faced them.

Breaks Against Giants.
 Mathewson, several years younger than Plank, was the less a veteran, worked methodically on the suggestion of Mack Grandall in a fashion that showed how well he had studied them since he first faced them.

The Giants made a stab at Baker and missed him.

Then he tried to make a play on Murray at the plate by throwing to the first base. That came to pass and Eddie Murphy hit the ball. Eddie Burns did not throw. O'Leary went around the side and scored after Burns had caught McKinnis' line drive. Murphy tossed the ball to second to that Baker at first. He was too far back when he made the catch to throw in to McLean in time to stop and ended the inning.

The top photograph shows O'Leary sliding headfirst into third. The lower snapshot is of Collins' sliding headfirst into third after a pretty hook slide to third.

Baker Collides With Plank.
 Murray lifted an easy little fly over the box that Plank could have caught with one hand. Shaffer second and would have probably been doubled up before he could return to first. But he ran over to the box and collided with Plank.

Merkle Saves Matty.
 Fred Herkie saved Matty a lot of trouble in the sixth by a wonderful play. Baker hit the first ball pitched for a single to right and O'Leary swung at it. Herkie hit into a double play that seemed from Collins to Barry to McKinnis.

Montague was put out for slugging on the second and Flieder went around for the marker. Three Techs got 15 points. The Moccasin could not stop the onslaught. FINAL SCORE: Tech, 71; Chattanooga, 5.

FLORIDA LIQUOR MEN MUST PAY LICENSE

Fight Over Excise Law May Result in Abolition of "Jim Crow" Bars.

JACKSONVILLE, Oct. 11.—Owing to a misunderstanding as to the extent of the new law for the sale of liquors, passed at the last session of the Legislature, liquor dealers here and throughout the State are striving to secure the county license which is provided for in the new law.

Miss Willie Duane Thomas

of Tampa, who, after a visit with her aunts, Mrs. Lena Carr and Mrs. Lee Doid, in Rome, Ga., has returned to her college in that city to take special courses in voice, expression, piano and art. She is secretary and treasurer of the Florida Club at Shorter.

It is provided that whenever any such business is located outside the corporate limits of any city or town, the owner of such business shall pay a county license in addition to the city license. Five hundred dollars shall go to the State and an additional fifty to the county. DEBILITATES OF HIS START IN "RISH" LEAGUE

Breaking Into Majors Is Not as Hard a Task, So Thinks Cracker Hurler.

By Elliott Dent.

Maintains of Cracker Pitching Staff.

IF YOU have read the baseball story, "Breaking in the Big League," you have had an opportunity to judge the exact feeling of the player undergoing that experience. But did it occur to you that breaking in the bush leagues furnished quite as many thrills and moments of anxiety?

In breaking in the minors a fellow realizes that he is undertaking quite a task and is similar at the very top of his so-called ladder of fame as a ball player.

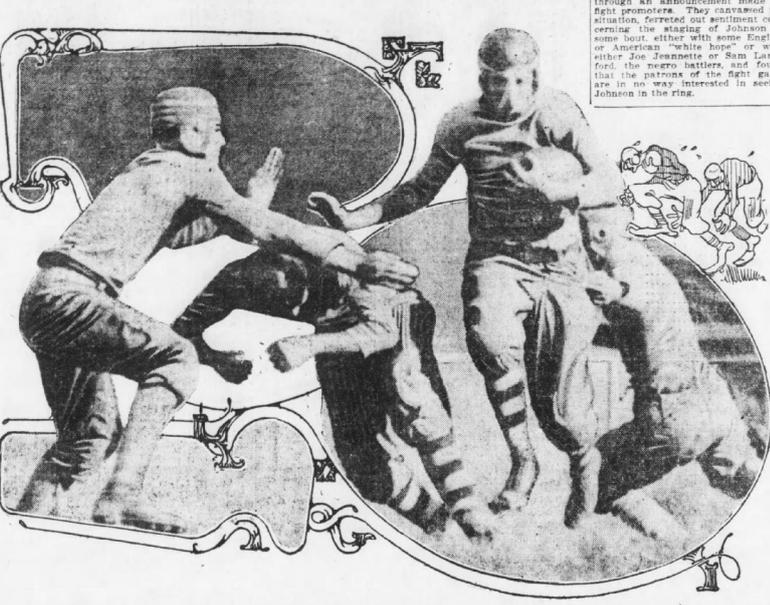

They feel that even should they fail to hit the mark and have to fall they will land on a soft landing where the stars of the game must come in the course of time.

THE busher can not entertain that same feeling of satisfaction, for once he fails to show the class required he drops and there is no foundation below to catch him.

My experience as a writer being very limited, I will not attempt a story which would cover the subject, "Breaking in the Bushes," but will give my own experience in a few words as follows:

IT WAS the evening of the 11th and I wore the uniform representing the Little City of Winston-Salem, N. C. I will never forget my first impression of the town. I landed there about 10:30 p. m. I was met by a young-looking man who stepped off the train as I blew my whistle. He told me that he would see to it that I would be taken to a room at the hotel. He was a very nice fellow, and I was glad to see him. He was a very nice fellow, and I was glad to see him.

London Fight Fans Don't Want Johnson

LONDON, Oct. 11.—The London fight fans do not care to see Jack Johnson, negro heavyweight, in action. This fact became known through an announcement made by fight promoters. They considered the situation, fostered out sentiment concerning the staging of Johnson's fight with either Joe Jeannette or Sam Langford the negro battlers, and found that the patrons of the fight game are in no way interested in seeing Johnson in the ring.

Hardage Praises Auburn Eleven Has Good Chance to Beat Vanduy

By Innis Brown.

OUR old friend Lou Hardage rolled into the city a few days since after a short sojourn in Birmingham. We say "rolled" advisedly and with firm intent, since Lou has lately acquired for himself a regular automobile, and he wishes it understood that this automobile really runs, and that he did not suffer the humiliation of having to pedal in a day seek the services of a repair man.

After duty apologizing for his somewhat greasy and grimy appearance, Louie fell onto his favorite topic—football—with considerable animation. It is as easy to get Louie to talking football as it is to keep Combe back from discussing any of his strategy concerning an approaching World's Series. Having been quite abashed and awed, Louie disposed as follows:

"You can let the family album tell you that Mike Donohue has a regular football team at Auburn this fall. You know he trimmed my team Saturday, 36 to 6. While we had, of course, expected a licking, we had hoped for a little more conservative score. Well, when that game got well under way I was very glad to get my boys out with no more than was handed us."

The Auburn team looks to be pretty well balanced, as near as can be judged from this early in the season. But the thing that struck me especially was the work of the back field. I believe that Mike can put any one of three separate back field trios in, and with the exception of Kirk Newell, I have some doubt whether you could tell from their work which had first choice in the estimation of the coach. I may go further and state that Mike expressed the same opinion.

In my opinion the game between Vanduy and Auburn at Birmingham is going to be some hummer. I honestly believe that if the game was to be played Saturday of this week, Auburn would come through with the long end of the stick, and understand that things at Vanduy are rather unsettled here, and hope that the team is going to come through in great shape a bit later. But if there is any indication or lack of balance on the Auburn team just now, it will take a lot better expert than I am to locate it.

Griffith After Two Outfielders From N.L.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11.—Four National League outfielders looked good to Clark Griffith.

The only reason Manager Griffith went to the World's Series was to meet some of his friends in the National League and talk business. He has found out that no American League manager will let him have any players worth a nickel. The Chicagoans will win the 1914 pennant if they can get a couple of 300 hitters, and no manager in this league will build up Griff's pennant-winning outfit.

The Old Fox isn't telling which men he has in mind, but it is possible to guess that one is with Pittsburgh, another with Philadelphia, and one with Cincinnati. Griffith is on the friendly terms with the men in the National League.

Ugly Sores Quickly Banished

You Marvel How Worst Skin Eruptions Disappear as Result of Famous Remedy.

If you should meet a man varnishing a tree with great attention, you would be inclined to quit such things and attend to the blood. So it is with the skin. Some eruptions, such as eczema, psoriasis, malaria, scabies, or what you will, are not cured by the use of ointments. Ask at any drug store for a bottle of S. S. S. and you are then on the road to health and you are direct, just as positive, just as certain, in your treatment as the best of the best. SLAYER OF TANGO GIRL RUSHED TO EXECUTION

Chicago Police Investigate Henry Spencer's Story That He Killed Twenty-five, and Plan to Hurry Trial and Hanging.

Drug Victim Tells Simple Facts of Crimes Committed With Death Hammer—Girls, Brides, Older Women His Victims.

CHICAGO, Oct. 11.—Detectives and public prosecutors alike are ready in their declaration that every effort will be made to rush to trial and to the gallows Henry Spencer, confessed murderer of Mrs. Mildred Allison-Roxton, the "tango girl," and the slayer as well of 25 other persons, if his statement is to be believed.

The police department is advised by Spencer's story of his many murders. It has been ascertained that a number of the crimes of which he told probably were committed by him just as he described them. As to others, it is fairly well established that he could not have committed them, as he was in jail when they occurred. However, the fact remains that Spencer is one of the most remarkable criminals of the age.

"I am sure he killed a number of persons," declared Captain Quinn, chief of detectives to-day. "Possibly nearly as many as he claims to have killed. He is, despite his dapper confession, a remarkable criminal."

Robbery His Sole Motive.

Spencer makes no plea of insanity per or supernatural message as an excuse for his crimes. Instead he tells frankly that robbery was his motive in almost every case. Sometimes the stake was small, a few dollars or trinkets of small value. But in other cases, evidently, the lives of his victims were even cheaper. With the most astounding sangfroid, he tells of slaying young girls, brides, older married women and mothers.

Spencer's mind is morbid, through and through. He is in the jail very peculiar, "a bit crazy," that is, unbalanced by long imprisonment. In addition, his diseased imagination has been further spurred by the "hop-ple." He is a confirmed user of drugs, particularly opium. It is for this reason that the police are investigating carefully every detail of his alleged confessions.

Spencer paces his cell incessantly, nervous to the verge of frenzy. The after-effects of his last opium orgy are accentuated by the merciless mental tortures of the third degree through which the detectives have put him. He smokes innumerable cigarettes seeking in tobacco some relief from his wrecked nervous system.

Tells of Murder Hammer.

During the last liquidation by the detective, Spencer was plainly excited in mind and body. He declared he made brave efforts to conceal his condition. "I was and again Captain Halpin would push him for details of his alleged murder or another. Some times the captain was armed with cards proving Spencer's statements in some particular. The Spencer would close his eyes, and with a sigh of weariness declare, "I can't remember. My mind is bad today."

Then his fevered imagination takes flight, and he accuses himself for the declaration of fresh dreams.

He tells always of his hammer, that being the favorite instrument of death with him. When he killed Mrs. Roxton, he had his hammer along with the revolver, to be used in event of necessity. A hammer has been dug up near Wayne, Ill., with which Spencer claims to have killed a score of persons.

The man insists that his stories are true. The detectives are investigating and send telegrams everywhere to secure corroborative evidence. When a telegram came from the chief of police of Delavan, Wis., saying, "I have two women were murdered here here," and similar messages came from officers in Detroit, Boston Harbor and Paw Paw, Spencer said with contemptuous emphasis:

Keeds at Rural Constables.

"You will find that all those women were murdered just the way I told you and I did it with these hands. You country constables don't know anything. If you will let me tell you myself you will find out that I have told you the truth."

Just then a telegram came from Sheriff Thompson at St. Joseph, Mo., which was regarded as corroborative evidence.

Keeds Constable here.

It reads: "I have killed here twice. I got at Sheehywood Pond. Body found, but unidentified. We have warrants for arrest of man answering Spencer's description for about 40 other persons here and at Paw Paw."

The stories that Spencer tells under these of the third degree are horrible in their simplicity. At times it seems that he even prides himself on his achievements. In one case he told of marrying a German girl to whom he referred as "Helen Gouff's maid."

She had $200 in a savings bank, and he was certain that fact that he had shown her three days. The next day he married her to marry him, so he said.

"We were married by Lee M. Best, the pastor of the Fifth Avenue Church, HENRY SPENCER, drug victim and confessed slayer of Mrs. Mildred Allison-Roxton, Chicago tango teacher, who has confessed to slaying twenty-five others, most of whom were women, for money, and whose confession has been corroborated in part by the police.

I told her I was a traveling salesman. I told her we would go West and buy a farm and live happily, and the next day she drew the money from the bank. We went to Fair Montgomery. I took her then about twelve miles on foot to show her some and I told her I owned. We left the road and went into the woods, when I struck her with a hammer two blows on the head and killed her."

Killed Bride on Lake.
He told next of killing two girls at Delavan Lake Hotel several months ago. One, he said, was a school teacher from Oakdale, Iowa. The other was a young bride, a mere child, who had come to the hotel for the week-end, awaiting her husband. He took her riding on the beach and killed her.

"She wore a stiff collar," he said, "so I could not choke her, so I had to hit her with the hammer. At the first blow she yelled so I had to strike her again or three times more. I waited there for about half an hour, describing second chat. Then I rowed about 25 feet to a spot where the water was deep and the current was swift. And then I threw her overboard."

The story was typical of his narrative—brilliant simple as it was. When he had finished it, an awe-struck fellow on the group of detectives and newspaper men in the institutional chamber. "That over-kill is true," he cried. "You'll have to believe me, yet."

Judge Promises Wife To Hang Husband

Woman is Satisfied When Told That Offending Spouse Will Also Be Shot.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 11.—The most vigorous prosecution ever heard in the Municipal Court was conducted yesterday by the wife of Miller Benjamin, who charged the defendant with abusing his family. The woman refused to be silenced, asking Judge Price to give her husband two years in the penitentiary, relating a thousand petty details of domestic trouble, and spilling the very effect which she related to produce.

"Yes, madam, we will take your husband to the court and hang him to-morrow at sunrise. After that we will shoot him three or four times, which was the only sentence which satisfied the trait wife."

Benjamin was taken downstairs, supposedly to the cells and let out to freedom by another door than that by which his wife left the building.

JOHNSON SETS MARK OF 36 WINS IN 1916

There is no mystery about who is to head the American League pitching list for the season of 1916. Everybody has been waiting for a good while. Walter Johnson, of Washington, is the name of the gentleman. He leads the league in theory, in fact and every other way, so far as pitching is concerned. No pitcher with a win 10, 16, 20 average can hold in above the Big Smoke. With his record of 26 victories against 10 defeats. The only mystery is, how did the seven defeats happen?

Cobb Leads Batters in American League But Falls Short of .400 Mark

As usual, Tyrus Raymond Cobb, of Detroit, headed the American League batting list in the first nine months of the season. He led the league in runs, hits, and home runs. He was the only player to hit 30 home runs in a season.

Youngsters Top Slabmen in National League

The National League pitching last year did not develop anything to compare with Wood's great run last season or the 36 victories of Walter Johnson this year in the American. The 'Big Six' Mathewson and Sinton, of the Phillies, won the most games in the National, Matty Winfield and Sinton '25. The leaders of the league, apart from Big Jim Vaughn, who won five out of six starts, were three youngsters, Demaree, of the Giants, and Humphries, of the Cubs, each won fifteen and four games while pitching for Chicago, and four for Detroit.

ISLANDS SINK; NOW PERIL OF PACIFIC TRAVEL

Two of Friendly Group Disappear Beneath Ocean After Furious Circular Storm.

NEW CHARTS ARE NECESSARY

Vessels Steer Clear of Tongas Because of Fear of Fouled on Hidden Reefs.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Oct. 11.—The "Friendly Group," two landfalls of the Friendly of Tonga group in the South Pacific have disappeared, swallowed up by the sea, which thrust them above its surface only to withdraw them again.

They are Falcon and Hope Islands and their disappearance is believed to have taken place some months ago, during one of the worst circular storms that ever struck those waters.

May Be Hidden Menace.

How far this is a real menace and how far it is a mere phantom is not known, but it is a very real one, it is believed to have a fathom or two below the sea level a hidden menace to vessels in those waters.

The disappearance of the islands was reported at Sydney by the British authorities and the Trinity Brothers were notified.

Traders Brought News. "One of the regular trading steamers between Sydney and the Tonga group reported the sinking of the islands."

Just prior to this the instruments at the Sydney naval station showed that several violent earthquakes had taken place about 100 miles north-east of Sydney.

Ran Into Hurricane.

"We had made our first sight of land since leaving Esmeraldas, the night before," they reported. "The weather looked bad, scurrying rain-squalls struck the horizon with intervals all morning, but about an hour before sunset time the sky took on a deep coppery hue."

"We were running with the wind on our quarter with everything up as supper we felt the vessel heel over until she was almost on her side. All tonnage and topgallants were blown to ribbons and only the fore course and spanker remained."

"What struck me at the time was the terrific sea that came up suddenly, and I thought at the excitement was over, that there must have been some kind of a volcanic upheaval."

25,000 Boys Enlist in Pure Seed Contest

Wisconsin Agronomist Says Lads Can Increase State's Wealth $120,000,000 Yearly.

MADISON, Wis., Oct. 11.—"Give me the boys of 12 to 14 and I'll improve with the importance and responsibility of agriculture so that they may stay fixed on the farm," said R. A. Moore, professor of agronomy at the University of Wisconsin, who has instituted a pure seed contest in which 25,000 boys of 14 counties are interested.

Cuts Off Feather on Hat as It Ticked Him

Tight Follows on Street Car When Passenger Charges Destruction of Hat.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 11.—A middle-aged citizen of Middletown, Ohio, was fined for the tickling of the feather on the hat of Miss Edna Holmes, who was the next seat to him on a street car.

He cut off the feather and another tickled him on the nose and ear. The police finally released him.

Countess Soehreny (Glady Vanderhilt), $32,010. Duchess of Roxburghe (May Goelet), $77,510. Mrs. H. H. Spender (Clay Pauline Astor), $12,000. Mrs. H. H. Spender (Clay Pauline Astor), $12,000.

POPE WILL BE ASKED TO THAT GEMETERY SALE

Lot Owners in Denver Burial Ground Declare They Will Appeal to Pontiff.

DENVER, Oct. 11.—If necessary to prevent the sale of Calvary cemetery, near this city, and the removal of the bodies to Mount Olivet, persons who have relatives buried in Calvary will make a pilgrimage to Rome and lay their grievances before Pope Pius. Just as soon as Bishop N. C. Mata returns, it is expected that a committee of cemetery lot owners will take up the matter with him.

There are only two ways, according to the contentions of the lot owners, that the bodies can be removed and the cemetery devoted to commercial purposes. One of these is by unanimous consent of those who have relatives buried in Calvary, and the other is by direction of the Pope.

Definite decision probably will be made as to what disposition is to be made of the cemetery in October after the hearing in the District Court is concluded.

A mandatory injunction was issued restraining the city from interfering with burial in Calvary cemetery. If the city loses this case it is expected that citizens will take action to prevent further burial and carry the case to the highest court. If the cemetery association loses, it will have the cemetery on its hands for all time to come.

MISSOURI MAIDS GET EXCELLENT CHANGE TO WED

Single Men Outnumber Marriageable Women 141 to 100 According to Statistics.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., Oct. 11.—Missouri maids, young and old, bachelors, bachelorettes, spinners or tilands, short or tall, thin or fat, from 15 to 45 years old and over, stand a better chance of matrimony than do the average state available man of the State.

The odds would be 141 to 100 in favor of each woman securing a husband in that kind of a way or to transpire over and hence, if every single person in Missouri who has never been married before decided suddenly to take this step.

In other words, there are 141 single men in Missouri for every 100 marriageable women in the State.

The above statistical information is reported in a bulletin which says there are 418,319 single males in Missouri, 141 to 100 females, and 38,134 females, widows and spinsters are not included in the calculation.

That women marry younger than men is illustrated by the fact that there are 11,441 women being married annually in Missouri, 141 to 100 as at the same age. There are 12,411 married youth under 15, as compared with 12,411.

The women women reach the age of marriage, the single ones become scarce, in proportion, than do single men, this ratio being lost up until the age of 25 is reached, when the ratio is 141 to 100, and up to 34, the ratio is 141 to 100.

Divorces are more numerous between the ages of 25 and 34 than in other periods.

D. A. R. Wins Fight Against Flag Ads

Miller, Who Uses 'Old Glory' on Flour Sacks, Apologizes to Organization.

LEAVENWORTH, KANS., Oct. 11.—Mrs. Emma Blatt Van Tye, State chairman of the D. A. R. committee against the desecration of the flag, has received letters from William Teichgraber, the Gypsy City miller, who uses "Old Glory" for an ad on flour sacks, and from L. W. Hammer, the Saline County attorney, assuring her that the nation's emblem never would appear again on Teichgraber's flour sacks.

They also offered profuse apologies for not answering her letters written a month ago.

The miller informed Mrs. Van Tye that he had 25,000 flour sacks on hand with the emblem of "Old Glory" printed upon them, and asked that he be permitted to use them.

Coal Road, Famous by Novel, a Failure

Receiver is Appointed for the Alaska Railway and Terminal Company.

SEATTLE, Oct. 11.—The strike for the rights of way from Bataila to the Behring River coal fields, over which the battle of Bruner's crossing was fought several years ago, and which Rex Beach has perpetuated in one of his novels, was revived when William Wray brought suit against the Alaska Pacific Railway and Terminal Company for a debt of $100 and asked for a receiver.

The complaint said the company was organized and that, apart from twelve miles of grading and some track, it has not done anything else.

The court appointed T. L. Bigger, a goods dealer for the Pennsylvania capitalists who backed the proposition, temporary receiver.

FROZEN EGGS O.K.; STUDENTS FED FOR TESTS

May Be Stored for Years Without Damage to Food Quality, Decides Bacteriologist.

LAWRENCE, KANS., Oct. 11.—The $100,000 egg industry of the State has been saved several million dollars annually as the result of a series of experiments conducted by a University of Kansas expert to learn whether eggs when frozen may be kept for an indefinite number of years without injuring their food value.

The results of the experiment prove conclusively that eggs may be frozen indefinitely without their wholesomeness for food purposes being destroyed.

Six students were fed three times daily for seventeen days with food prepared with second grade frozen eggs. Each man consumed an average of three and one-half eggs a day, more than would enter into the dietary of the average person.

Examinations made regularly showed the frozen products were having no injurious effect upon the students.

All but one gained from one and one-quarter to three and one-half pounds during the seventeen days, and the one who lost weight gained it back in the following week.

Bacteriological examinations of the eggs showed no change in their food value, and the presence of anything injurious.

RAYNHALE, Oct. 11.—Clarence Vetter, 10-day in a critical condition at the Savannah Hospital as a result of injuries he received when he was struck by a car in Raynhales, the negro driver is in a serious condition, but it is believed he will be discharged in a few days.

GIRL'S SPURNED PLEAS TO 'PAPA' DIVORCE BASIS

Letters Introduced in Wife's Suit Tell of Unhappiness of Broken Home.

NEW YORK, Oct. 11.—The rejection of a child through the beating of her parents' home life is told in a series of remarkable letters introduced in a suit for divorce brought by Stella Trosel, of No. 297 Second avenue, Brooklyn, against Charles Trosel, a doctor, of Philadelphia.

The letters are written by their only child, Jennie, 14 years old, to her father, who left Brooklyn in 1910, in one she writes:

"Dear Papa—Why don't you answer me after all these letters I have written? Have you not one spark of love for me? I am a poor girl, but I have to send me money, if that is the reason you are afraid to write, I am yearning to hear one word from you."

"The happiest moments I have known when I think I am a child, when we were happy, like we used to be. Then I wake up to the awful truth, that you are not here."

"But it won't stay so. A day is coming to clear the world of the likes of men. It is the woman years, I am a powerful suffragette. I have such a hatred for the sea, which is called masculine. Do you know what I am in a world for? All they do is to make a wreck of a woman's life."

HUSBAND SEKS DIVORCE; WOMEN'S CLUBS THE CAUSE WASHINGTON, Pa., Oct. 11.—Harry A. White, a former Philadelphia politician, is suing his handsome wife, Bertha A., for a divorce, giving as his ground that "women's clubs have ruined her."

She declares she became a member of several women's clubs, and after one came from them showing the effects of drink.

"When Will the Wind Be Awearry of Blowing"

MARY ELLEN SIGBEE

Copyright, 1913, by the Star Company. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

THIS earth is a beautiful, happy home for those full of life and hope. It seems a sad and weary abode to the broken in spirit waiting for the end.

The beautiful picture on this page illustrates life as different beings see it.

The wind blows across the sky, and the stream flows on, hurrying. The woman, representing tired age, disappointed and hopeless, asks, wearily, "WHEN will the wind be awearry of blowing?" and hopes that the end may come soon.

The little girl, representing happiness in life, asks, eagerly, "When will the stream be awearry of flowing?" and hopes that the end may never come.

The wind blowing and the stream flowing typify human life.

The wind, invisible, is thought, and we know it only by its power and its effect.

The stream flowing is the body, coming from a source unknown and hurrying on to its destiny, which is to be restored and lost in the ocean, as our bodies at the end are restored and lost in the universe whence they came.

You may measure your power of imagination and your peace of mind by the effect that these verses produce upon you.

WHEN will the streams be awearry of flowing
Under my eye?
When will the wind be awearry of blowing
Over the sky?
When will the clouds be awearry of fleeting?
When will the heart be awearry of beating,
And nature die?

Never, oh, never; nothing will die;
The stream flows,
The wind blows,
The cloud fleets,
The heart beats—
Nothing will die!

Nothing will die;
All things will change
Thro' eternity.
'Tis the world's Winter;
Autumn and Summer
Are gone long ago,
Earth is dry to the centre,

But Spring, a newcomer—
A Spring rich and strange—
Shall make the winds blow
Round and round,
Thro' and thro',
Here and there,
Till the air
And the ground
Shall be filled with life anew.

—From Alfred Tennyson's "Nothing Will Die," published in London in 1878 by C. Kegan Paul and Co.

Happy are those to whom the blowing wind and the flowing stream are as beautiful music. And unhappy those who turn away in weariness and wish that it were all ended.

Luckily, for men, the blowing wind and flowing stream are as mysterious today as they were in humanity's childhood.

We know that the water is made up of two gases, united; that it is compelled to flow because of its molecular construction and because of the law of gravitation.

We know the compounds that make up the blowing wind. We know that it is a mere gas, rushing in to fill the space created by hot air that has arisen.

We "KNOW" all about the streams and the wind. We can take oxygen and hydrogen and with an electric spark create water. And with nitrogen, oxygen and a few other materials, man could actually create air fit to breathe.

But with all our knowledge, there is that within our brains that responds to the mystery of the wind blowing, trees bending and sighing and the stream hurrying, murmuring, fighting its way back to the ocean—as we ourselves, hurrying, murmuring and struggling, fight our way back to the ocean of eternity to which we belong.

When will the wind be awearry of blowing? When will the stream be awearry of flowing? NEVER.

Forever and forever, untold billions of years hence, the streams will flow and the winds will blow—the little winds that bend our corn, the feeble streams in which children play on this earth, and the gigantic winds that are the forces of endless space, the gigantic streams like our milky way.

The stream that flows at the child's feet can be crossed in a moment.

The great stream of suns stretching across the heavens is so vast that light travelling one hundred and eighty-six thousand miles in a second takes scores of years to cross "that stream."

And our own bright sun, a million times as big as this earth, is an insignificant little bubble in the lactic stream, with a life as brief, comparatively, as the life of the tiny bubble that reflects and dissects the sun's light as it dances along.

Everything on this earth, in this life and throughout the universe is MOTION, ceaseless changing, without beginning and never to end.

In that thought those that are awearry in heart can find comfort, those filled with life's happiness can find joy.

Life and power can never end. The spirit that is weary and broken need not despair. It will find its way to the ocean of rest in time, and again start on its journey of effort in some part of this cosmos in which suns and nebulae are the drops of water in an infinite ocean.

The trouble with many of us is that our eyes do not see the flowing stream, our cheeks do not feel the blowing winds, our spiritual eyes are blind to that vast stream of light and power that flows across the sky at night, and our spirits insensible to that strong wind, the everlasting breath of Divine justice and law. Our bodies are cooped up in hideous cities, away from the streams and the wind of the bending forest.

And our spirits are cooped up in narrow minds that never see the majestic beauty and endless power of the outside universe.

Never will the stream be awearry of flowing, and never the wind awearry of blowing. You are a drop in that stream of life that is to flow on forever, and the thought within you is a part of that eternal thought, the breath of an infinite, immortal universe that shall never cease.

Let those that are young and full of hope rejoice that they begin life in a beautiful world in which the streams flow and the winds blow.

And let the weary take heart, knowing that the infinite life will restore to them youth, happiness, forgetfulness of sorrow and give to them again the joyful spirit to face the blowing wind and rejoice in the flowing stream, as does the happy spirit in this picture.

Everything is hope, life, change eternal, motion without end, space that is infinite, time that never began and will always endure, and law unchangeably just.

And wonderfuller, in this perfect universe, is the earth, our inheritance. May we, as a race, be worthy of it.

THE COLEMAN CASE

BY HUGH S. FERRISS.

The Panthers and Bears are meeting the end of a bitter struggle for the baseball championship, with the Bears as their nearest bitter and speediest base-runner. This result in their defeat by the Panthers in the first game of a crucial series.

On the eve of the second game a college baseball player, who has appeared with the assumed name of McCarthy, has joined the assumed name of McCarthy. His skill as a pitcher has been demonstrated by his performance in the first game, when he pitched a perfect game.

It is believed by the fact that the Bears are to lose with little doubt the championship to the Panthers, who are traveling with the team. A gambler who is willing every effort to induce the pitcher to throw the championship to the Panthers is the assumed name of McCarthy.

Hein Baldwin, the girl on whose account his uncle cut "Kobhnor" off, calls at the hotel to see him. She says she has never married a professional ball player, but she has her enemy William Lawrence, who is a pitcher, and she has seen him leave the room to keep an appointment with a woman.

William Lawrence, the gambler, and the pitcher, who are the two main characters in the story, are the two main characters in the story. They are the two main characters in the story.

stretched, smiling, a strangely transformed girl from the cold, half-sour one with whom he had parted on a short time before. The purpose of her visit had puzzled him, and the warmth of her greeting added to his astonishment.

"What is it, Helen? I hardly thought you would visit me here," he said.

"I only reached the city last night," he replied. "I had a seat beside her on a divan."

"And well, Helen, I hardly thought you would visit me here," he said.

"I thought your ultimatum settled all that," he answered, ill at ease. "It was rather a shock to find that you cared more for what I was than for what I am."

"You know, Larry, that you placed me in a painful position," she said. "You must not stay in my uncle's house."

"But, Larry, aren't you going to quit all this business and go back to school?" he asked.

"I expect to go back after the season is over," she said. "I don't want to see you here."

lessly. "Nothing wrong. You may tell your uncle, with my compliments, that I will continue to play with the Bears to the end of the season, and that in spite of him and his dirty work we will win that pennant."

How far did the girl go to the ball without a backward glance, ignoring the sobs of the girl who burst her face in her handkerchief and wept gracefully, telling him between sobs that he was cruel. He took his hat from the servant and strode rapidly down the steps. His mind a turmoil of emotions.

The girl he had left so abruptly continued her stilled, stagey sob until she heard the front door close. Then she sat up quickly, glanced at her features in a wall mirror, brushed back a lock of ruffled hair and rubbed her eyes lightly with the side of her hand.

"How has she changed," she said to herself. "I never mentioned it, I must go to Uncle Barney."

She ran lightly up the stairs to the den where Baldwin, smoking impatiently, was waiting for her.

"Well, he's infuriated," she said. "Did you land him?"

"Don't speak so vulgarly," Uncle Barney said. "The girl refused to play with the Bears."

"He told me to tell you he intended to keep on playing to the end of the season, and that they would win it for you."

"That's all right," she said. "It makes me so angry."

"Then it makes any difference?" he asked.

"I don't care," she said. "I don't care."

If to see whether or not anyone was following him, then turn up the side street and enter a safe Swanson quickly led the way. They passed the saloons on the opposite side of the street, and after walking half a block they retraced their steps and stopped at a doorway opposite the entrance.

"Let's wait here and see who goes in," suggested Swanson.

"Who do you expect him to meet?" inquired Kennedy.

"I was being modest that crook for ten days now, and I want to find out what they're up to."

"Why didn't you tell me before?" demanded Kennedy. "I'd kick his head off."

"We hadn't the goods on him," explained Swanson. "That's what I want you for. If we can prove he's not so crooked."

The big Swede manfully folded his ponderous jaw into a fist and flexed his biceps.

"He's been pitching funny ball lately," said Kennedy.

you go out there and get in a mix-up with Edward. "I'll teach him not to cut in on other people's business."

"You stick it to this over," said Edward. "You want to see McCarthy beat up, don't you?"

"I'd like to see it myself," said the pitcher viciously.

"Well, he'll get it good enough now," promised Edward. "I'll teach him not to cut in on other people's business."

"You stick it to this over," said Edward. "You want to see McCarthy beat up, don't you?"

"FELLOW," said Swanson, as he hung up the receiver, "some friends want Williams to meet them as soon as he can. He'll know where. Fellow says it's important. Whoever sees him first tell him."

He glanced meaningly at McCarthy, who nodded to show that he understood, and he sat down to be repaired.

"At that same instant, there was an earnest conversation in progress in the room from which the telephone summons had come. Williams had just come, and he was talking to his brother-in-law, who was sitting by the telephone. Williams had just come, and he was talking to his brother-in-law, who was sitting by the telephone.

"He isn't there," he reported to Barney Baldwin, who was sitting by the table, looking for the high ball player. "Ethel, he's trying to cross us or he's playing some trick on his stand-in with the manager. He's gone to the theatre with his sister and we can't get him until night."

"Sure he isn't trying to cross us?" asked Baldwin. "He won yesterday's game instead of losing it."

"He tried hard enough to lose it," asserted the gambler. "He tossed up the ball and those dubs couldn't beat him. He pitched it pretty nicely, too. He was sure to try hard for a while, waiting his chance, and then he lobbed the ball and tried to make them hit it. I tell you you've got to handle that red-headed kid at third base as you promised you would."

"He saved that game for us. We've got to get rid of him."

"The gambler," snarled Baldwin. "I want to get him to quit the team and go back home. I know the fellow. He's as bull-headed as his uncle, and that's the limit."

want the girl to do anything wrong. Just get her to make up with the McCarthy, or whatever his name is, and get him away from this ball team for a week. I tell you, Baldwin, this is getting to be a serious matter with me, and with you, too. If you want to avoid your political power.

"All right, all right," said Baldwin hastily. "Maybe I can persuade the girl to help us out. I'll try."

"You'd better succeed—if you want to send your uncle to the Senate," said Edwards threateningly.

"I'll go right away," asserted the politician. Baldwin arose, hesitated, went down to his limousine that was waiting and ordered the man to drive home, although it was his custom to remain downtown until late. At home he sent at once for his wife, and after a later talk, during which he was carefully advised that McCarthy had made overtures toward reconciliation with his uncle, the girl went to the telephone.

"He'll have to go alone tonight. I've got to make a call."

"Who is it?" asked Swanson indignantly. "Run on, Kobhnor, so I can be at home."

"Run on, Kobhnor, so I can be at home," said Swanson. "I don't want to see you here."

"I'm a little past 7 o'clock, when McCarthy, who had been rescued from the hospital in an express office after his first period of prosperity, came out of the hotel. He was undecided, wavering as to whether or not it was wise for him to keep the appointment to call on Hein Baldwin. He had avoided a direct promise, but half committed himself in reply to her sulphurous invitation. After the preceding interview, in which the girl had repudiated her engagement, he had been thinking of her relations with her, and with each review of the past he had become more and more convinced that she was selfish and that she regarded for him had been financial. He knew now that he never had loved her and that his boyish infatuation had been a mistake.

During the long ride up to the city red and green lights were more of a distraction than of a relief. He had understood vaguely that Barney Baldwin was wealthy, but he was unprepared to find out how much money he had. He had seen Baldwin in the most exclusive part of the River Drive section. Even in the semi-darkness, he thought that the house and grounds looked more of money than of refinement and taste, and an impression was left on his mind that he was about to enter a white and gold parlor set with mistletoe garlands that belonged to the glaring color scheme of the South.

Hein Baldwin entered the room in a few moments, and McCarthy gazed at her in admiring surprise. She wore a gown of some white, clinging stuff that revealed entirely the perfect lines of her tall, slender figure. Her arms were bare, and a single diamond bead on her neck glistened and sparkled against the whiteness of her throat.

She came forward with both hands out-

They were expecting to meet a friend late tonight," remarked Swanson, intending to take a new tack with the bartender. "Rather tall, slender young fellow. Has anyone been in?"

"Young fellow came in a while ago something like that," replied the bartender. "Seemed to be expecting someone, but turned around and went out. Maybe that was him."

They knew he was lying, and Swanson, without changing expression, said:

"Must have thought he was in the wrong place, or too early. Maybe he'll come back. We'll stick around awhile."

Had they known what was transpiring in the private room just beyond the doorway their interest would have been greater. The man who had stood at the end of the bar had gone at the first opportunity and was reporting to Easy Ed Edwards, who grew more on his with, while Williams sat shaking his head.

"I knew they'd get on. If they report to Clancy I'm done for," he said.

"They haven't seen you," said the gambler angrily. "I don't know who they are, but they don't know me. Who are they, Jack?"

"I don't know," said the bartender. "They're a big, lanky looking guy, a Dutchman. They're a big, lanky looking guy, a Dutchman. They're a big, lanky looking guy, a Dutchman."

"Swanson," said Williams. "He's been looking at me as if he knew something here. Two or three days. He has followed me here. Got on a light suit, very soft of goods. It must be McCarthy," whined Williams. "He's always with Swanson. They're looking for me. I wish I had kept out of this."

"This fellow McCarthy is the one we want. If we can get him out of the way it'll be easy. Jack, I can get even with you. I'll take you, Baldwin, for trying to double cross me, Jack."

With a roar of anger Swanson burst into the room. Kennedy's fist had caught him on the forehead, and he had fallen back. Kennedy's fist had caught him on the forehead, and he had fallen back. Kennedy's fist had caught him on the forehead, and he had fallen back.

CHAPTER XVII

SWANSON left the hotel intending to pursue to his volunteer detective work only a few moments after McCarthy started upon his return to the hotel. He had remained long enough to see Williams leave the hotel by the back door, and he had seen Kennedy and they had seen Kennedy and they had seen Kennedy.

"Williams were going to trail," was the only hint Swanson gave at the start.

"You told me there was a chance to get a scrap. That guy went off."

"Maybe those he's going to see with repaid Swanson encouragingly.

Swanson did not know then that he had made his arrangement with Kennedy. Williams had pleaded for the telephone Edwards that he was afraid to meet him because he thought Clancy might see him. Williams had already suspected his own danger, and he had thought he had succeeded in deceiving the bartender. He had thought he had succeeded in deceiving the bartender. He had thought he had succeeded in deceiving the bartender.

CHAPTER XVIII

THE disappearance of Silent Swanson and Ben Kennedy brought consternation to the ranks of the Bears, consternation that increased as the hour for starting the first game of the series against the Jacks drew near. McCarthy, returning to the room after his surprising interview with Hein Baldwin, was fully determined to tell his chum all that had taken place, and to explain as well as was possible the position in which he found himself. He planned to urge Swanson to go with him to Clancy, and for that reason to go with him to Clancy, and for that reason to go with him to Clancy.

The Missing Players

He planned to urge Swanson to go with him to Clancy, and for that reason to go with him to Clancy, and for that reason to go with him to Clancy.

Kennedy Strove to Stop the Rush of the Giant and Was Borne Backward by the Weight of the Man. With a Roar of Anger, Swanson Hurdled Himself into the Fray.

"You know who he is," queried the gambler in surprise. "Why don't you tell the new-packer boys and show him up? That would be a fish him. He's a user with his identity, and if we can prove he hasn't any right to play with the Bears they'll have to throw out the names he's in."

"That's just trouble," replied Baldwin bitterly. "He's straight as a string. He never played ball except at college. We can't tell who he is because that would prove he's all right and make him stronger than ever."

"Who is he?" inquired the gambler.

"He's the nephew of old Jim Lawrence, of Oregon, one of the best players men and there Lawrence is his guardian. He had some sort of a run and the boy left. Now if we prove who he is it puts him out of the reach of suspicion."

"How do you know these things?" demanded the gambler.

"The boy and my niece were sweethearts at some. I caught her to tell me when I discovered she knew him. They were engaged once. I understand."

"Then," said Edwards determinedly, "get your niece on the job. If anyone can handle that fellow it's your niece."

"Oh, yes," protested Baldwin, with a show of indignation. "I can't see how it can be done. I can't see how it can be done. I can't see how it can be done."

"She probably was willing enough to get into anything," said the gambler. "I can't see how it can be done. I can't see how it can be done. I can't see how it can be done."

"I don't want to see you here," said Baldwin.

"Perhaps, Helen," he said softly, "if you could explain just why you want me to quit playing I could see my way to do it."

There was no mistaking the triumphant gleam that flashed into the eyes that had been tear-filled an instant before.

"That's being a sensible boy," she said, baring her eyes with a bit of lace. "I don't like to see you making an exhibition of yourself before a crowd—for money. She shrugged away beautiful shoulders disdainfully.

watch during the game when Edwards strolled slowly across toward the rendezvous. Williams' face was lit up with pride when he met the gambler on that evening, was surrounded. The gambler was convinced that the pitcher had made every effort to lose the game and that he had been balked only by luck and the fielding of McCarthy. He wanted to learn from Williams whether or not there was any other player on the team who could be bribed to win the game.

The gambler was growing desperate. He knew that the pitcher, and he knew, too, that without money the enemies he had made would turn upon him and wreck his power in other directions. As he strolled along he cursed and cursed, and he cursed and he cursed and he cursed.

EDITOR CITY LIFE SECTION—Sir: Ordinarily I would write "Dear Sir," but if you care to read further than this you may gain a sort of impression that I have a grouse, or so for an indication of one that a chemist couldn't detect the difference.

I know you will look in the envelope which enclosed this epistle and then make a few remarks in the original Esarrist as to why the usual batch of "copy" is not included.

Furthermore, I have my doubts about your being able to read this. Don't write me a sarcastic letter informing me that editors never read manuscripts unless typewritten, and that no one has been writing on both sides of the paper since Cædms the Phœnician invented the alphabet. This isn't new to me. I heard of it quite a while ago.

In the first place I was written on both sides of a sheet of paper that came around an express package (except where the label is glued on), but if you will control yourself long enough for me to explain, you may be a bit lenient about it.

When I got "home" the other night, quite prepared to sit down to my typewriter and dash off my customary brilliant, after-dinner, scintillating contribution for you, there was a trifling delay.

In the first place I found I wasn't living where I did. My typewriter was missing. Also the typewriter table, the book case, the rug, chairs, pictures and everything else in the room except such portions of the wall paper as were not gouged out.

Trying to appear cheerful and nonchalant, I remarked to the Mrs. "Moved my den to another room?"

"Yes," she replied.

Just like that: "Yes." After listening to this long and detailed response, I mildly inquired which room.

"Front corner room in the new house at 33 Fortuna avenue," she replied, somewhat coldly, "the room you picked out for yourself."

Then I recollected it was the day we moved. I had forgotten all about it.

"Why linger here, then?" I suggested.

"Well, the gas and electricity and water isn't turned on over there, the range isn't set up and the varnishers have gurned up every floor. Outside of that the place is all right."

It was a bit embarrassing, I will admit. But I went down to the dining room, as it was dinner time.

"Hey!" I shouted, "where's Lucy?"

"Lucy," it might be explained, is the sturdy Ethiope who washes the dishes, boils the water and eats five large meals a day, six days a week, all for the trifling remuneration of eight iron men per week—and.

Just what the "and" includes we do not know, as we have no card system showing a comparison between the provender that comes in and the provender assimilated by the immediate family.

"Oh, Lucy has gone; she wasn't strong enough to stand around and see me pack up the household goods," explained the Mrs.

"Oh, well, just a little bite of anything will do," I said, "and then I will dash off a little humor."

"All right, take a bite of anything you see. The house isn't ours and we're moving, so I don't care what you bite. But the den's not to tell me you neglected to get your dinner in town tonight!"

But it wasn't as bad as all that. I dug up a can of sardines and some O-Gra-Bis-Bitt. Broke my knife to open the sardines, but got it open with the axe and saved several of the sardines. The grease spots on this paper show the struggle I had. It is difficult to read where the pencil has written on the grease spots. I used this wrapping paper for a haberdash.

Having broken my knife, the only way I could sharpen the pencil was with my teeth.

I really had a corking funny idea for a long article. While hunting around for stationery I discovered that our beds were missing.

"Where will I sleep tonight?" I asked.

"Oh, on your back, as usual, I suppose," was the reply.

"But the beds?"

"Packed and moved away. I'm going to sleep in the hammock. I think there's some excelsior left for you if you care for it."

Two sardines and some O-Gra-Bis-Bitt and nothing to sleep on but my back sort of took my mind from my literary efforts. But I started to write.

"Just a minute," said the Mrs.; "help me bring up these jars of preserves and then pack the kitchen ware in those boxes, and after that bring the books down and take down those pictures in the front room. After you do that—"

"It was so thoughtful of you," I remarked as pleasantly as a thirty Ambassador drinking a toast with Bryan, "to send away the dining-room stuff and the food and beds, and keep those front room pictures. That painting of the Coliseum by moonlight and that engraving of the Battle of Waterloo and that old print of an English hunting dog will assure me a hearty meal and a soft bed. Why didn't you—"

"—Take down the curtain rods and move the three trunks of bedding down from the attic, and dust the plate rails and take up the Hitchcock Holoemum," continued the Mrs., not minding my feeble interruption.

I did those few things for her.

"Now I will write," I exclaimed.

"That reminds me—when you would take down the towel racks and soap holders and glass shelves in the bathroom and pack them, and bring up some boxes from the basement."

I did. I also did a few other odd jobs, such as taking down the shades. It was only 12:15 a.m. when I finished. I then hurried up that wrapping paper and gazed a point on my pencil and started to write.

I had forgotten what it was I intended to write about, but that didn't worry me. I just went ahead and wrote this, and I trust you will find it full of sufficient feeling.

Perhaps you think this is funny. It is not funny. Instead of being laughable, this is one of the most "moving" articles ever written.

Next week we hope to have everything settled except the rent and the moving bill and a few little trifles like that, and I will try and do better. Just now I feel about as funny as a yard of crepe.

I hope you will be able to read this on both sides of the paper, and, therefore, learn that this is not intended for publication, but merely as an excuse. Yours is considerable disgraced,

AL—Eeb, str, keb?
JACK—Don't yell "cab" at me. Can't you see that I prefer shank's mare?
AL—I don't know him. I'm going to vote for McCall myself. But maybe you ain't got money enough to ride in a hah?
JACK—Money? My dear man, I make over $20,000 a year.
AL—What are you, a police-inspector or a counterfeiter?
JACK—Nothing of the kind. I am America's foremost tea-taster.
AL—I suppose that's something like a soap-sponger.
JACK—Not at all. When the Autumn tea-leaves are falling I sit from house to house and see that all good housewives show good taste in tea.
AL—I gotcha. You're a tea-taster.
JACK—Furthermore, my ability in this direction is hereditary. It has been in our family for years.
AL—What?
JACK—I say, hereditary. Something that's handed down from father to son.
AL—Oh, I know. Like these shoes I got on. They belonged to the old man.
JACK—Huh, no. I mean that my father had ability similar to mine.
AL—What was he, a coffee-smeller?
JACK—Not he. Why, he had twice the ability that I have. He made over $40,000 a year!
AL—Thank Heaven such liars don't grow any more.
JACK—Father had the most artistic sense of touch of any man in this country. He was America's champion sugar-feeler!

AL—Oooh!
JACK—He could feel any brand of sugar on the market and tell the differences from any other kind without ever looking at it. Why, he could feel brown sugar from white in the dark—
AL—Ow! Feel the color! Say, let's all go to Nut College together.
JACK—And he never missed spotting any brand that was sent to him. AL—He must have been feeling well all his life.
JACK—Father was such an expert on sugar that he never missed as the feel. Of course, once in a while he might stumble—
AL—Might stumble now and then over lump sugar, yeh.
JACK—But he knew the number of grains in every pound without counting them.
AL—Here, Jump into my cab and we'll drive to the Vermont border.
JACK—You can't name a single family in the United States that has the mark of cleverness stamped on it any finer than ours.
AL—Oh, I do. I do. Now you take our family. My father made $50,000 the last year of his life. And I inherit his cleverness from father.
AL—And he was?
AL—A beer listener!
JACK—Ha, ha! Beer should be drunk, and not heard.
AL—Father was the official beer listener for the United States Government. His business was to prevent the reddling of kegs with inferior grades of wids.
JACK—That doesn't listen well to me.
AL—He would visit the various beer fountains, call for a keg, and if the spigot gave forth a suspicious sound foreign to that particular brand of beer, pinch the barkeep.

JACK—He was the first man to lend an ear to the cause of beer wam?
AL—But father really got his ability from grandfather.
JACK—Ah, yeh. Was grandfather a storm-brewer?
AL—No. A hop-peeper.
JACK—Oh. He got the jump on beer by going after the hops.
AL—Now, if you know anything about beer, you know that in three main constituents are malt, barley, and hops.
JACK—I see. The hops are the hardest to catch.
AL—Oh, emphatically. Grandfather used to wear rubbers when he went hunting them so they wouldn't hear him coming.
JACK—Did he ever have any trouble catching his malt?
AL—No. Malt-catching can't compare with the fine art of hop-peeping. Malt-peeping is very simple. Grandfather always kept a troupe of trained maitese oats that attended to that.
JACK—Did grandfather ever use the one-legged hops?
AL—Never. He caught only the healthy hops. He went after them at midnight, while they were still open.
JACK—Of course. All hops close at one o'clock.
AL—Exactly. Grandfather would softly, yet nonchalantly, enter the hopyard at midnight with a powerful lantern, trail it on a hungry bunch of wild hops, hypnotize them to a standstill, and catch them before they had a chance to run. I'll now sing you a little Oriental hop song.
JACK—All right. But first tell me where you wish to be delivered.

Our Own Lecture Course—No 3

"HAIR."

By Professor Hy. R. Soot.

MAN has been more or less familiar with hair, ladies and gentlemen, ever since he stopped swinging from knoths to boughs and chattering, and came down to earth to walk on only two of his feet.

He was even more familiar with hair during those early days when he ran about on four feet making a perfect monkey of himself.

But to-day we know of only two kinds of hair, the kind that is attached to us by means of nature, and the kind that is a "perfect match."

And in the regard it should be admitted that man is more fortunate than woman, for when he loses his hair he doesn't have to match it.

Since the days of Adam, man has endeavored to see just how many stumps he could do with his hair, especially with his beard. In the days of Cyrus the Persian the men used to cut off the ends of their beards as evenly as a bunch of asparagus is trimmed to-day in order that their beards could not grasp them by the chin growth. From this we learn that matrimony was a thoroughly established institution even then.

Before that time the patriarchs used to wear such long beards that they would walk half way up to their chins, when burrying, before they could stoop and uncurl themselves. Then someone invented scissels and took ornaments and golden collars and such things and, alppot wear the beards, in order to give the ornaments a show.

Samson had a head of hair that gave everyone the impression he was the father of seven well-known sisters, but another person came along with a beautiful head of hair and a pair of tangy eyes and, seeing away went Samson's hair, strength, abandon and everything else.

Later the Spartans began to shave. All they had were bronze razors about as sharp as a can opener, and as they persisted in shaving, they were called "Spartans." Then the Romans adopted the smooth face. Caesar was bald. Brutus bawled him out, and later he was struck out, although it took twenty-three strikes in the idea of March and other portions of his anatomy to put him out.

Catigula wore a curly blond wig, sprinkled with gold dust, and then began the downfall of the Roman Empire. But it wasn't until along in the Victorian period that we really set up and took notice. About that time the men began wearing little "side-boards." Later they branched out into the wader and more fluffy-suffles sort of hirsute facial adornment, yelopt, "sideburns."

To the drama, including everything from farce to be-luddy melodrammer, we owe our acquaintance with the facial forms of hair adornment more than to anything else. No one would think of imitating an English lord without giving him one of those long, drooping, "trailer," regular Lawrence O'Ursay mustaches.

And the German style! Who can miss it now? What theatre patron will believe an actor is German comedian unless he wears a short, stubbly patch-bush on his chin? Where would Weber & Fields have been but for those square-cut chin whiskers? Fame would have known them not. And the programme may declare that John W. Stax is a rich banker, but the play will be missed if he appears before the footlights wearing anything except from gray side whiskers.

Best of all, however, is the villain—the bold, bad, cruel, wicked, beardless villain. What actor may hope to be a villain unless he has a wide, blue-black mustache to stroke nonchalantly as he lures the innocent girl from home or forces old Uncle Hiram to sign these papers? And old Uncle Hiram must wear "lace curtains," the sort that come under the chin and look as though he had tucked them up that way on a bet.

Without hair, ladies and gentlemen, the dramatic art would die out completely. Imagine a villain without a black mustache, or any other character without their own particular style of carefully trained capillary growth. And as for actresses, unless they have something like three peaks of hair they are not to be considered.

Without hair no one would be buying "Silver Threads Among the Gold" to-day. Without hair those pretty striped barber poles would never adorn our streets; without hair man wouldn't have to wait two and a half hours for his wife to "get dressed."

And yet, hair is not essential to fortune. We know a certain party who hasn't got one-sixteenth as many hairs of his own on his head as he has millions, and yet one of the products of petroleum is vasoline, the greatest hair persuader known.

There is a peculiarity about hair. When you have it you are always parting it, and when you finally part with it you cannot part it.

As a guessing contest, hair has it all over the Oracle, Sphinx, age of a woman and everything else. We begin by wondering if "her hair is her own," and from that we wonder whether it will be blond or brunette next season.

A woman will apply a bleach and wonder whether her hair will be golden, purple or just plain green. Hair is also a home destroyer. One single strand of yellow hair on the shoulder of a brunette-maid man will do more—but why dwell on such a distressing topic?

Hair is woman's crowning glory, the lack of it with man is the jokesmith's most ticked, and as I gaze over this great gathering of beautiful ladies this evening, wearing their wonderful and massive collures, I feel sure that ninety-nine and seven-tenths of their husbands could truthfully refer to it as "our hair," since these husbands bought it for them.

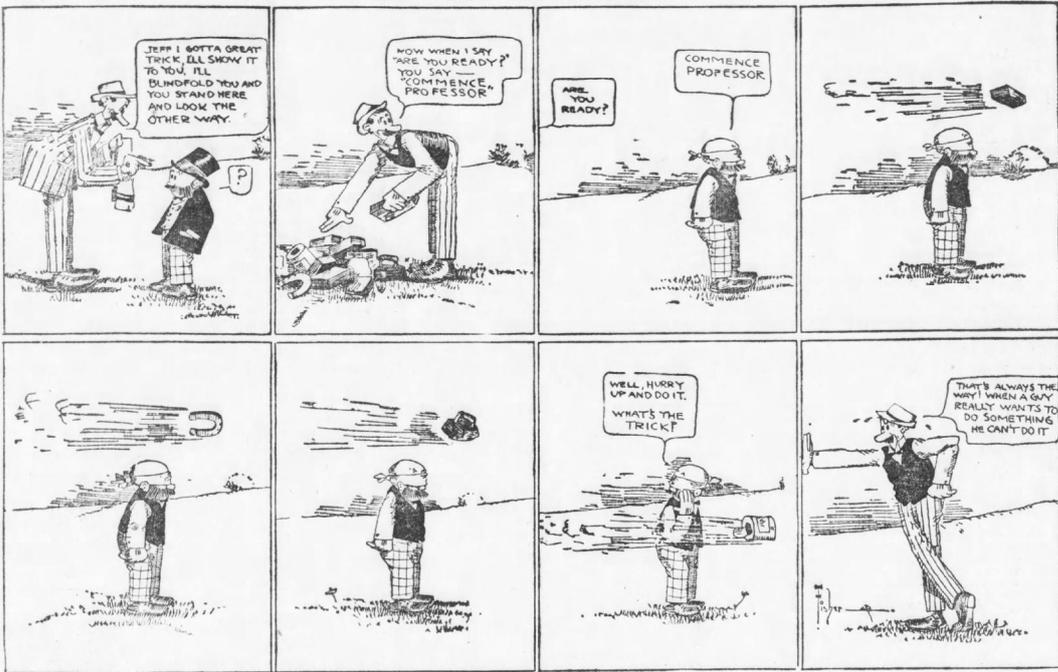

Primitive man, scientists declare, was quite covered with hair. The more civilized he became, and the more he knew, the less hair he had, until to-day the average man is more or less bald at forty.

Who ever saw a bald-headed woman?
Mrs. Panburn, please write.

"I Love the Love-Light in Your Eyes."
TALL and honest shipping clerk at breakfast set one day.
"Today is payday, dearest love," his pretty wife did say.
"I think you are the dearest boy, you're all the world to me
You haven't got a single fault. You're sweet as you can be!
You never care to wander and you never care to roam,
And when the cashier pays you off, you always hurry home."
Her husband wiped away some egg that lingered on his cheek,
And after hearing all that save, these few words he did speak:

CHORUS:

"I love the lovelight in your eyes,
Them eyes so blue and kind,
It shines so much on Saturdays
It nearly drives me blind.
You call me cheap on Thursdays
And on Fridays I'm a hound,
But I love the lovelight in your eyes
When payday comes around!"

All this was many years ago. That husband is no more,
He sleeps beneath the cruel earth, with daisies blooming o'er,
His fond wife wed a millionaire so aged and near-sighted
He couldn't see no lovelight even if her eyes had lighted.
She sometimes goes and sits for hours beside the grassy mound
Where lies the man who cares no more if payday comes around.
And often she remembers while the tears they wet each cheek
The man she used to worship and them few words he did speak

(Same chorus.)

Can You Imagine His Answer?

"Do you want to draw or deposit?" asked the postoffice clerk.
"No, I don't. Or want to put in."
The clerk steeled, and shored a form across the counter.
"Sign your name here," he said, pointing to the exact spot.
"Above the line or below it?" asked the man.
"Just above."
"The whole name?" queried the visitor.
"Yes."
"Or can't write."
Folled.
Sponger (muttering acquaintance)—Hello, Smart? Oh, I say, do you believe dreams go by contrasts?
Smart—I do.
Sponger—Well, I dreamed last night that I asked you for the loan of $10 and you refused.
Smart—Then that proves my theory—you're not going to ask me good day!

Thankful.

Giles met an acquaintance on the street the other day, although he airily tried to avoid him.
"Hello, Giles, dear boy!" exclaimed the other. "So glad to see you! I'm going to London next week; can I do anything for you?"
"No, going's enough, thanks," replied Giles, moving on.

Obedying Orders.

Mr. Elliott, while at his country home, gave orders that no one should be allowed to step over a particularly fine plot of grass except his cow. He left a new man in charge, with very strict instructions to that effect.
The following day the mistress of the house was out for a game of tennis at a neighborly place, and wishing to make a short cut, walked across the grass from one path to another. When about half way across she was halted by the man in charge.
"No one to pass here, ma'am," he called in no gentle terms.
Mrs. Elliott drew herself up in considerable anger.
"Do you know who I am?" she demanded.
"No, ma'am," replied the man impassively. "I do not know who you are, but I know that you are not Mr. Elliott's cow, and nobody else is permitted to walk on this grass."

"What makes you carry that horrible shriek machine for an automobile signal?"
"For humane reasons," replied Mr. Chiggins. "If I can paralyze a person with fear, he will keep still and I can run to one side of him."

Snappy Paragraphs from Jimpson Corners

LITTLE ANNO DOMINI PITTS is conversant from a two-week's sojourn of measles.

Miss Pansy Sod is back from a trip to Morgantown, where she went to visit a relative over night. Miss Pansy is getting to be a regular globe trotter, having made the trip to Morgantown twice within the past six months.

A mysterious stranger caused great commotion at the Eagle Hotel yesterday. He presented a ten-dollar bill in payment for his room in advance, and did not knock the meals in the usual manner. It was believed by some parties that the fair fame of Jimpson Corners had penetrated to the centre of Metropolitan financial activities and that this was a representative of the Rockefeller or Morgan interests looking over the real estate field. All property on Main street doubled in value within one hour. Later it was learned that the stranger represented the "Quick Rise" Trust Company and had just received his quarterly commission.

Mrs. Ye Editor was the guest of honor at a most recondite theatre party at the Nickelodeon yesterday evening. It was the annual celebration of her marriage to Mr. Ye Editor, but although the latter was invited also, he was unable to attend owing to a lack of trousers. Overalls being regarded as de trop. Refreshments were served at Tibbitt's Soda Fountain after the performance. If some of our subscribers who are in arrears would settle up, we could mingle, properly parted, with the society for which we are fitted.

The marriage of Miss Amy Pitts, of this city, and Mr. Toll Betcher, of Morgantown, was solemnized at the First Ridge Church last evening, before the elite of the community, by Rev. Bhestone Holyhead. The bride is head trimmer at the Bon-ton Millinery Parlors, and the groom is the local representative of the Scalper Correspondence School. The church was beautifully decorated in out-paquet festoons and Chinese lanterns.

The wedding tour has been postponed until the groom can get a standstill, and in the meantime Mrs. Betcher will be found at her old haunt at the Bon-Ton to-morrow.

Here's the Way Our Experts Doped World's Series. You Couldn't Go Wrong

How It Looked By EXPERT

I PICKED the Jints. I had no figures. I had seen only one game of ball in twenty years, but one an expert always an expert. I used to be an expert corn husker in dear old Iowa. Consequently am an expert now.

Speaking of the World's Series, I am moving to the suburbs of Hoboken in a few days. It is a nice place to live, I think.

Most of the people in the neighborhood are pretzel experts.

Yours truly,

Figures Can't Lie.

BY STEW BULLERTON.

HERES the way I doped out this series. In the big leagues in 1913 exactly 1,764 home runs were batted over the ham sandwich and on the ball park fence.

The percentage of these runs that were seen by the umpires was 87.1007.

McGraw worked out 27,086 winning plays in 1912 and 1913.

This shows that he would make his team score 47 runs in each game of the world's series.

These figures do not agree with those given in the paragraph above, but then even castor oil doesn't agree with some people.

On the figures one can see that the result would be a clutch for one team. You could pick out the team yourself.

The Inside Dope.

BY TWISTER SMITH.

I FIGURED it out this way.

Spook, the fourth baseman of the Jints, drinks tea at breakfast. The odds were that a New York hotel will give you bad tea.

This would start Spook off wrong on the day, and he would be bound to blow up.

Brick Rodgers, the sixth baseman of the Athletics, was born in Poughkeepsie.

He tries to keep this fact from the public, but it was a clutch that some enemy would give Brick a way and Brick would be up in the air through the series.

On this inside dope, it looked as if either the Jints or the Athletics would win the series, unless the contest resulted in a draw.

AT THE GAME BY BETTY BURGDUND.

I wasn't at the game, so I can't write this article.

Nature Note

A bee flies 79 miles in gathering one ounce of honey, but its stings travels only one-sixteenth of an inch in creating any amount of bees?

A MURDERER was lurking Near the corner of a street, With intention to demolish Any victim he might meet. From a neighboring house there issued A poor woman, old and gray, Who, suspecting his presence, Came directly in his way. With a joyful cry the villain Waved his dagger in the air; Then he hissed, like steam escaping, And he grabbed her by the hair. Did I stand by, idly watching, While he did his dirty work? Not I hastened to the rescue And I took away his dirk. Then a score of his accomplices Rained punches on my head, And, while sinking to the sidewalk, I could hear the words they said. "Hey, you piece of Gorgonzola. Maybe next time you will know That this guy is only acting For a moving picture show!"

A tenement was burning. On the seventh floor a child At the window sought assistance. While the crowd below went wild, When the mother saw her darling She let out an awful shriek. Then she started for that building, With the mob too scared to speak, Did I let her—wretched mother, With a horror-stricken face? Not I gently pushed her backward, And prepared to take her place. Then I hastened to the building, Reached the entrance in one bound; And I cried, "Your child ain't perah In the flames, when I'm around!" Then, it seemed, the building tumbled And entombed me in the wreck. When I woke, an hour later, Thirteen men sat on my neck. They were filling out instructions From the mob that shouted "Kill!" Oh, the blooming son-of-a-bitch Spoiled a thousand feet of film!"

SOCIETY MATTER BY POLLY PEACHTREE

kind kinwoman, Miss Mary Wheat, of Atlanta. This prospective matrimony tour is to include a leisurely trip through the valley of Virginia, and begins in a few days. Miss Wheat will be in the party, and one of her other friends, I believe.

It seems that the engagement of Mrs. Whitcomb to a prominent New York man, which was announced last year and then broken, is not to be repeated. Atlanta friends hope for a visit here during the winter. Mrs. Whitcomb usually comes for a month or so in the season and she always gives one or more beautiful entertainments. She spends much of her time traveling and in the East.

HEARD President Wilson was advertising for the addresses of his kinspeople in order to invite them to the wedding," said a friend of mine. "I do not really think it is as bad as that, but certainly it is the Wilsons are going to have a gathering of the clans when Jessie is married to Francis Sayre."

All the relatives are to be invited—that is, all the near relatives as far off as third cousins, anyway. I gather from Washington gossip that there are lots of kinspeople in Georgia, a number here in Atlanta and others in Savannah and Jones. Of course, pretty Marjorie Brown, who has already been christened as a White House guest, will be present and possibly her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Brown, though the chance of Mrs. Brown may prevent her accepting the invitation. Mrs. Brown and Marjorie are in New York for the winter and therefore are convenient to the home of their kinspeople in the White House. Mrs. Frank Gilchrist, of West End, and her mother, Mrs. Hoyt, are near relatives of Mrs. Wilson. Mrs. Hoyt being a sister of Mrs. Wilson's mother. Then the young minister, pastor of the Second Baptist Church, Rev. Mr. Axtell, and his sisters, Misses Carrie and Althea Axtell, are kinspeople of the President's wife.

There are four or five affiliated friends of Mrs. Wilson in Atlanta who will probably receive invitations to the White House wedding. Mrs. Harry Schuchman, highly respected, a water color sketch which Mrs. Wilson, when a classmate of hers, portrayed and presented to her friend, Miss Mary Nagle, has often visited the Princeton home of Mrs. Wilson, who will return in school days. The details of the White House wedding have been kept close to date. Even Miss Hagler says she knows none of them as yet, except the date.

GRACE BOYKIN, an Augustan belle-to-be, holds the palm in this city for beauty and for grace of dancing. The young girl she is the prettiest girl in the city, and certainly the most graceful of any of the girls who frequent the Country Club.

She is a brunette with exquisite coloring and a vivacious manner, and has been a great belle over this South Sea her debut. Added to these charms is a flower-like smile, and all of which makes Miss Boykin an exceptional young woman.

Her fiance, Fred C. Evans, one of the popular young men of Augusta. He is a son of Mr. William Evans, of Greenville, and a grandson of the late General Clement A. Evans of Atlanta. I suppose that, should Mr. Evans, his charming Atlanta daughter, or any of her relatives, will be one of the bridesmaids at the wedding, which is to take place early in November, I believe.

BETTY PRILL is gossiping of home society, but her friends, and even the few boys here, caught the fever of Polly Peachtree's invitation for the Tea. Tomorrow comes out this week with a column headed "Fusion of Society by a Yellow Jacket." I note that the Tea boys are honest enough to add to their helpful acknowledgments of their inspiration, "With Apologies to Polly Peachtree." I am being told that the late "Sinner's Battery" just now. The truly gratifying.

VE a piece of good news for you. Charming, Kiki Jackson, whose prospective loss was were all being, is not going to leave Atlanta, after all. You will be sure she is going to be married—there was no other fellow of the name. Her fiance, for her fiance, Edward Axtell, went wherever she went, and only such devoted attention that no one else ever had a chance.

chaining. Her engagement is announced to-day. One could not be blamed for falling in love with the pretty choir singer for the demure little white cap she wears when singing, in the choir as very fitting and more than usually becoming to the golden hair and blue eyes of the demure young woman. I am told that the romance was not only begun through the agency of the choir, but favored by the regular of Mr. Taylor's hair, and that Mr. Taylor has been a constant and attentive escort.

The wedding of Georgia Watts, the older sister of Louise, to C. C. Muckle, of Peach, was made very impressive by the beautiful music furnished by the full orchestra of All Saints, of which the bride was a member. I have had a number of friends who were invited to be married by a similar feature, for it adds greatly to the interest and charm of a wedding ceremony.

Miss Watts has been away all summer on an extended Western trip. She spent some time in Oregon and California and had a delightful summer. The announcement of her engagement to Percy Taylor comes immediately upon her return. Mr. Taylor, you will all recall, is the son of Mr. Howard Mace and of Natalie Taylor, Mrs. Robert Stewart, of Philadelphia.

YOU know Atlanta is teaching New York to dance now? Well, perhaps not exactly that of "sway" but, anyway, an Atlanta girl is teaching New York women all the latest steps. Several of my friends returning from their annual fall trip to New York remark that a commercial traveler or a shop buyer, but (and) have brought news of Donna Brown, who was an instructor of dancing since she returned from a year abroad this summer.

When a lady walking goes, she does more than show her face, that is why she walks going.

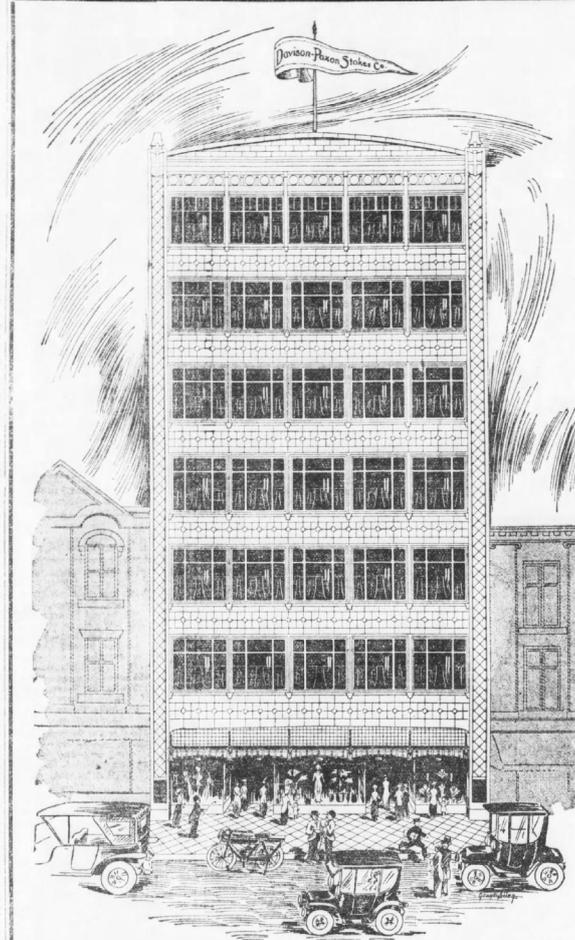

DISAPPOINTED in astonishment, mixed with admiration, at the attitude I caught of a pretty member of the young set the other day, who wore one of the new ankle stockings. There were two stockings of course, worn by the girl, but only one of them was an ankle stocking. At first sight the unaccountable look which she wore, but a closer inspection reveals the fact that the stockings are all made of one material, and meet with this neck hole.

The effect is charming, and the embroidered "ankle" does not detract from the inconsequence that a real ankle does not have. It is better kept for social affairs.

DISPERSIONS of the attractions and distractions of the newly opened social season, some of the young married women and single ones, too, for that matter, who are fond of going right on with their daily make-up. And they are all the better for it. It is not often that a woman is so happy as she is when she is doing without cosmetics like a regular game of golf.

I notice that future champions of the Women's Southern Golf Association are in training on the East Lake links. Mrs. Tom Frame maintains her usual standard by playing often and practicing. They tell me that Mrs. Valdemar Guise is playing a great game now, and will be a formidable rival of Mrs. Payne and Mrs. Jones in the next tournament if she enters the contest. Last Sunday morning I saw Miss "Kitty" Bright on the links, looking as bright as the morning sun, and playing well. Miss Max O'Brien is a steady player, and there are lots of others who play well and often, all of whom are doing their daily make-up. And they are all the better for it. It is not often that a woman is so happy as she is when she is doing without cosmetics like a regular game of golf.

Six passenger elevators are running for the convenience of customers, large, roomy cars of the newest type, silent, smooth-gliding, with none of the discomforts of the ordinary jerky elevator.

The people of Georgia should know this new building. It is the epitome of modern storekeeping, the latest pattern our Southland offers as the Ideal Mercantile Establishment, the model for new buildings to be copied from.

The systems we have installed for the convenience of the shopper should prove more than a pleasure to our customers. Methods have been improved where necessity demanded and new ideas installed. Service is our watchword. What the people want is what will be our aim to give.

There are so many new and novel features to our new store that it is quite out of the question to enumerate them all in a single advertisement. From time to time we will exploit different new things about our business in the public prints. At present we only call your attention to the big new store, the service it gives to its patrons, the beautiful merchandise on exhibition and the sure-enough worth-whileness of a visit. We invite you to come in and look through the various floors, criticize if you see anything you believe needs criticism. We will welcome suggestions.

News of Society

THE formal opening of the Piedmont Club Friday evening was a brilliant event, attended by 300 guests. The club has been greatly improved and enlarged during the past few months, and the club members found ample space on Friday evening, when the enlarged dining room was used for the first time.

Elaborate decorations prevailed in all apartments of the club. In the hall, where the stairway has been entirely changed and more rooms given, there were handsome palms grouped in the corners, and in the landing of the marvelous stairway, in the enlarged living room vases of pink and white roses on the mantel with quantities of palms and foliage plants in the corners. The lounge was gay with swinging baskets and greenery, and in the bedroom there were palms in the inglenook and in the corners, the handsome new chandeliers providing the only overhead decoration.

Finer was served in the dining room, each table having a decoration of pink and white roses. Individual luncheon holders of pink and white were at each plate, with a handsomely engraved menu card, having the date of the formal opening. A number of large parties were given on this occasion. Miss Jessie McKee, a debutante of the season, was tendered a party by Mr. and Mrs. Wilmer L. ATLANTA'S LEADING FLORIST

SOCIETY CHATTER by POLLY PEACHTREE

REALLY must tell you of a new amusement Atlanta girls have found, which is as old as the world, but is always new. This is the fascinating, thrilling, intensely interesting experience of having one's fortune told. The popular secret of the moment is not a reader of cards or palms or coffee grounds. She looks one straight in the eye with a compelling afterward. Marion is making good a law in Atlanta, and the Senator and Mrs. Smith are justly proud of their only boy.

First Debutante of Season

SEN'T it said that so many of Atlanta's beaux are beginning to let their mustaches grow just when the edict has gone forth from no less an authority than Harry Lehr that the mustache must go. Harry openly declared while he was at Newport this summer that mustaches were out, and long ones simply impossible.

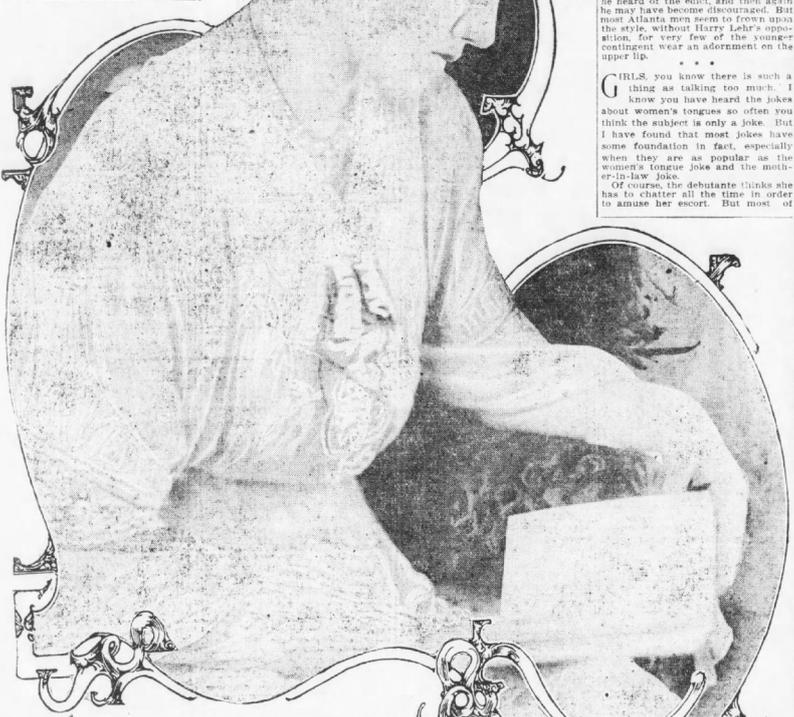

Anyway, it seemed that long ones were impossible to Atlanta—area before Harry said so, for I do not know of a man who has a long silky mustache. All of the men who wear mustaches wear them very, very short, and some are very, very scanty—of those huge affairs, you know, but just about two dozen hairs.

There's Nell Reid, for instance. His exceedingly blond mustache doesn't show off for all its worth, however. And Lamar Hill's mustache also suffers from the same disability as a color. However, John McCallin, Marsh Adair, Hal Hunt and John Woodside, Jr., have back mustaches which are cut and trimmed to the regulation small size.

Roy Dorcy, I believe, has just begun to grow a mustache, probably having been in ignorance of Mr. Lehr's opinion to date. And I think I saw Douglas Barnes with a hint of a mustache one day, though the next time I saw him it was gone. Maybe he heard of the edict, and then again he may have become discouraged. But most Atlanta men seem to frown upon the style, without Harry Lehr's opposition for very few of the younger contingent wear an adornment on the upper lip.

WHEN you know there is such a thing as talking too much, I know you have heard the jokes about women's tongues so often you think the subject is only a joke. But I have found that most jokes have some foundation in fact, especially when they are as popular as the women's tongue jokes and the mother-in-law joke.

Of course, the debutante thinks she has to chatter all the time in order to amuse her escort. But most of and hypnotic gaze for several moments. Then when he is to be supported, she begins to talk in an awed voice—and she talks things, on no!

One of the girls who recently patronized her assures me that she is wonderful. I will recount some of the prophecies she made and see if you can guess who the girl is—or who some of the men are. Why, yes, indeed, nearly all of it was about men, how else could a pretty young girl's fortune be told?

"She said I had had an admirer who is now fighting in high circles abroad. 'Who didn't you take that man?' she asked me, and then described Captain R, whom I had almost forgotten, but who is living in England now, and has a high official position. And she told me my fate was coming to Atlanta this fall." The girl's voice dropped to a whisper as she repeated the words of the seeress: "He has dark, wavy hair, which is brushed back from his forehead. His mother is a widow. He is not fond of society—and lots of other things. I know him in a minute! And the queerest thing was that she seemed to get mixed up in the identity of this boy and someone very near to him—and, you know, his uncle is a good friend of mine, too—and I am rather mixed myself!"

And so on—the friends of this young girl were all described, and her own preferences, failings, vanities and charms were noted by the woman, who never saw her before. I understand that some wonderful prophecies are being made, and I shall make it my business to find out all particulars for I want to know what's going to happen to everybody, so that I may tell you!

I love those tales of English life. Where, horseback, hunts, the hero leads a lot of girls. And always rides to hounds.

I'd like to ride to hounds myself. Across the fields of grass, but no amount of worldly pelf could get me on a horse.

I know I'd fall off or lose. And that would be a joy. I'd have to ride to hounds, I guess. Upon a trotting car.

I wear a pink coat or not to wear it; that is the question now agitating the minds of the women members of the recently organized Brookhaven Hunt Club. Those who are sticklers for the conservative say that the women, such for the women who ride to hounds is the severely plain and all-back riding suit.

Those who wish more of beauty and becomingness than of being strictly correct in the matter of attire are voting for the "perfectly adorable" pink coat. The men, I understand, are solid for the pink coat, and all of them are to wear the blue-hued costume at every hunt.

Anyway, the men have prestige and custom on their side, for the hunt is the one occasion when men may correctly wear a gayer costume than the women.

And while on this subject of the proper costume for a hunt club, I shall quote Mrs. J. J. Windle, an Englishwoman who has often taken part in the fox hunts over the hills and dales of England. Mrs. Windle says that, unless the hunt is an exceptionally brilliant affair with a social feature, the women all wear black, but on special dress occasions they don a coat of the same color as the men wear.

By the way, the eyes of Southern society are on you, members of the hunt club. In several society journals and newspaper records of society's interests, I have seen various comments on the inauguration or rather revival of the sport, which was universally popular in the South before the war, and which has lingered in its full strength only in Virginia these last 40 years. A New Orleans writer says that the announcement from Atlanta "should stir a responsive chord in the hearts of our young people, for there is plenty of good weather, and much open country around New Orleans to make hunting worth while."

The present is a fortunate time, reminds me of a story I heard some time ago about the experiences of a popular young girl, whose only fault was a hasty temper and a quick tongue. One evening she exercised this failing at the expense of the young man she really loved. He gave her an unexpectedly obdurate, left in a huff, and several days passed without a word from him.

The girl, in deep distress, decided to consult a fortune-teller, who was in vogue just then. She was given a small, mysterious package, with instructions to wear it next her heart, and whenever she met her lover to open the "charm" and to smile.

"I carry out these instructions, and your fault was a hasty temper and a quick tongue," the fortune-teller promised.

In about two weeks an eager and excited girl invaded the little home of the fortune-teller.

"You're just right!" she said. "I wear it next my heart, and I met Tom before he had just—just—just met me! He looked surprised—but he called me up that very night, and everything has been all right ever since then. I began to grow angry at anything he says, I remember to hold my charm and smile, and then things come right at once. It certainly is a wonder, this 'charm'—I wouldn't take anything for it!"

And the girl's smile held all the charm in the world. The fortune-teller, being human, smiled, too.

An interesting society chatter in a Washington paper had the following comment last week on a notable Atlanta wedding-to-be, which will interest everybody here:

"By the way, I must tell you that the following comment last week on a notable Atlanta wedding-to-be, which will interest everybody here:

"The wedding is going to take place on November 12 in Atlanta, and no guess the Smith family won't return here to see settled for the winter and the older girls know better. However, there are several in Atlanta's three and four year old set who talk too much. One of those who has a new electric would probably curtail her conversation to some extent had she heard the remark made to us a few days ago, when I asked a mutual friend—a young fellow whom she had invited to go for a ride in her new car—if he had accepted it."

"Not yet," he replied. "I'm waiting until I am strong enough to bear all the conversation that goes with the ride."

Now that remark was a bit rude, but I quote it in order that girls who have a tendency to talk too much may have the benefit of the hint.

kind kinwoman, Miss Mary Wheat, of Atlanta. This prospective matrimony tour is to include a leisurely trip through the valley of Virginia, and begins in a few days. Miss Wheat will be in the party, and one or two other friends, I believe.

It seems that the engagement of Mr. Whitcomb to a prominent New York girl, which was announced last year and then broken, is not to be repeated. Atlanta friends hope for a visit here during the winter. Mrs. Whitehead usually comes for a month or so in the season and she always gives one or more beautiful entertainments. She spends much of her time traveling and in the East.

HEARD President Wilson was advertising for the addresses of his kinspeople in order to invite them to the wedding," said a friend of mine. "I do not really think it is as bad as that, but certainly it is the Wilsons are going to have a gathering of the clans when Jessie is married to Francis Sayre."

All the relatives are to be invited—that is, all the near relatives as far off as third cousins, anyway. I gather from Washington gossip that there are lots of kinspeople in Georgia, a number here in Atlanta and others in Savannah and Jones. Of course, pretty Marjorie Brown, who has already been christened as a White House guest, will be present and possibly her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Brown, though the chance of Mrs. Brown may prevent her accepting the invitation. Mrs. Brown and Marjorie are in New York for the winter and therefore are convenient to the home of their kinspeople in the White House. Mrs. Frank Gilchrist, of West End, and her mother, Mrs. Hart, are near relatives of Mrs. Wilson. Mrs. Hart being a sister of Mrs. Wilson's mother. Then the young minister, pastor of the Second Baptist Church, Rev. Mr. Axtell, and his sisters, Misses Carrie and Althea Axtell, are kinspeople of the President's wife.

There are four or five affiliated friends of Mrs. Wilson in Atlanta who will probably receive invitations to the White House wedding. Mrs. Harry Schuchman, highly respected, a water color sketch which Mrs. Wilson, when a classmate of hers, portrayed and presented to her friend, Miss Mary Nagle, has often visited the Princeton home of Mrs. Wilson, who will return in school days. The details of the White House wedding have been kept close to date. Even Miss Hagler says she knows none of them as yet, except the date.

GRACE BOYKIN, an Augustan belle-to-be, holds the palm in this city for beauty and for grace of dancing. The young girl she is the prettiest girl in the city, and certainly the most beautiful of any of the girls who frequent the Country Club.

She is a brunette with exquisite coloring and a vivacious manner, and has been a great belle over this South Sea her debut. Added to these charms is a flower-like smile, and all of which makes Miss Boykin as an exceptional young woman.

Her fiance, Eric, a son of one of the popular young men of Augusta. He is a son of Mr. William Frederick Eric, and a grandson of the late General Clement A. Evans of Atlanta. I suppose that, should Eric Evans, his charming Atlanta debut, a very young and very attractive girl, or than any of her neighbors, will be one of the bridesmaids in the wedding, which is to take place early in November, I believe.

"BETTY PRILL" is gossiping of home society, and her friends, and even the few boys here, have caught the fever of Polly Peachtree imitation. For the "Tea" comes out this week with a column headed "Fusion of Society by a Yellow Jacket." I note that the Tea boys are honest enough to add to their helpful acknowledgments of their inspiration, "With Apologies to Polly Peachtree." I am being told that the late "Sinner's Battery" just now. The truly gratifying.

VE a piece of good news for you. Charming, Kiki Jackson, whose prospective loss we were all bewailing, is not going to leave Atlanta, after all. You will be surprised to be going to be married—there was no other fellow of the name. This summer, for her fiance, Edward Axtell, who, whether you want or not, she has drawn attention that no one else ever had a chance.

chaining. Her engagement is announced to-day. One could not be blamed for falling in love with the pretty choir singer for the demure little white cap she wears when singing, or the chair as very fetching and more than usually becoming to the golden hair and blue eyes of the demure young woman. I am told that the romance was not only begun through the agency of the choir, but favored by the regular of Mr. Taylor's past sessions. Mr. Taylor has been a constant and attentive escort.

The wedding of Georgia Watts, the older sister of Louise, to C. C. Muckle, Jr. was made very impressive by the beautiful music furnished by the first and best choir of all seasons, of which the bride was a member. I have had a number of friends who were invited to be married by a similar feature, for it adds greatly to the interest and charm of a wedding ceremony.

Miss Watts has been away all summer on an extended Western trip. She spent some time in Oregon and California and had a delightful summer. The announcement of her engagement to Percy Taylor comes immediately upon her return. Mr. Taylor, you will all recall, is the son of Mr. Howard Mace and of Natalie Taylor, Mrs. Robert Stewart, of Philadelphia.

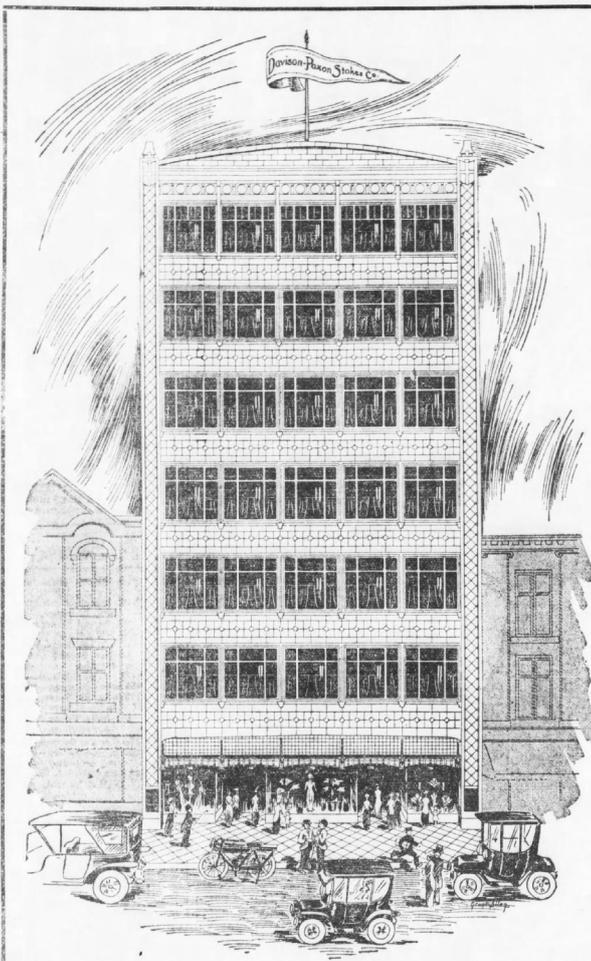

YOU know Atlanta is teaching New York to dance now? Well, perhaps not exactly that, of course, but, anyway, an Atlanta girl is teaching New York women all the latest steps. Several of my friends returning from their annual fall trip to New York remark that a commercial traveler or a shop buyer, but (and) have brought news of Donna Brown, who was an instructor of dancing since she returned from a year abroad this summer.

When a lady walking goes, she does more than show her face, that is why she walks going. (Always) ... a loss.

DISAPPOINTED in astonishment, mixed with admiration, at the attitude I caught of a pretty member of the young set the other day, who wore one of the new ankle stockings. There were two stockings of course, worn by the girl, but only one of them was an ankle stocking. At first sight the unaccountable look which she wore, but a closer inspection reveals the fact that the stockings are not all stimulated by an embroidered band which, like all good stockings, and meet with this mark alone.

THE effect is charming, and the embroidered "ankle" band, not only the inconvenience that a real ankle does, but it is better kept for social affairs.

Atlanta's Newest Trading Place

The big store that was built around, over, under, above, through and in our old store, now complete. The store with perfect ventilation, abundance of light, high ceilings, wide aisles, attractive departments, newest type of fixtures, and all the conveniences found only in a modern commercial building.

As near fireproof as a building can be built and with every appliance necessary for the comfort and safety of customers. Two sets of fireproof emergency stairways guarantee visitors absolute immunity from any danger in case of necessity arising for people to leave the building.

Six passenger elevators are running for the convenience of customers, large, roomy cars of the newest type, silent, smooth-gliding, with none of the discomforts of the ordinary jerky elevator.

The people of Georgia should know this new building. It is the epitome of modern storekeeping, the latest pattern our Southland offers as the Ideal Mercantile Establishment, the model for new buildings to be copied from.

The systems we have installed for the convenience of the shopper should prove more than a pleasure to our customers. Methods have been improved where necessity demanded and new ideas installed. Service is our watchword. What the people want is what will be our aim to give.

There are so many new and novel features to our new store that it is quite out of the question to enumerate them all in a single advertisement. From time to time we will exploit different new things about our business in the public prints. At present we only call your attention to the big new store, the service it gives to its patrons, the beautiful merchandise on exhibition and the sure-enough worth-whileness of a visit. We invite you to come in and look through the various floors, criticize if you see anything you believe needs criticism. We will welcome suggestions.

FOR MRS. WALKER'S SOCIETY in the SUBURBS

WALK-OVER

By MME. HAUTE MONDE.

PERFECT leather is a brief occupant of the fashionable field—briefly necessary for the glossy-worn material soon contracts its own modishness, and a very little of it seems to go a long way. A natty boot, fashioned by a well-known milliner, was of black velvet and had a soft cap crown and a narrow binding abruptly at one side and pointed outward to allow a lining of patent leather.

So one can gather the popularity of velvet, the reason is that it is so very warm, velvety there and velvety everywhere. The Parisians never seem to get over them, and her American friends are only too anxious to follow suit. Velvets are contained in the most effective manner with satins, ribbons and lace.

Woolen shawls are drawn across the front of some of the newest gowns and hang free from the hips. They are knotted below the knees at the back.

The waist line may be high or low. The figure is tightly tucked at and below the waist line.

To-day it is recognized that heavy gowns are in vogue, and the wedding gown tends to take that fact into consideration. While satin, once considered the only suitable fabric for a wedding gown was probably suggested more by the approaching dignity of matrimony rather than by its suitability to the usually youthful bride. Today, in spite of its modern softness of weave, which has made it really a new fabric, there is a tendency to leave it to the older brides, and with lace and orange blossoms it offers possibilities that can not be surpassed for this all-important occasion.

While the dressy tailored suits call for a blouse of crepe de chine, satin, net or nonmetallic, water of white than with picturesque Bryonic collars are worn with the lightest of modern blouses. These blouses are cut in the old-fashioned some inches below the throat with link buttons of color, the most tasteful, amber or coral.

A new treatment of the black silk evening gown is especially adapted to the remodeling of the old black set gown. Flounces of white lace and white net may be added on the foundation as to completely disguise the old fabric.

A safety dancing frock quite in the newest of fashions may be made of tulle or ruffles of white or white and one after the other from the short panicle to the skirt edge. The ideal material for these frocked skirts, and least trouble for the home dressmaker, is the famous crepe de chine embroidery, which nowadays is made as filmy and delicate as chiffon, and more durable than tulle, and which both in Paris and America is being put into the most delightful of dance frocks combined with lace, maline or tulle.

Some of the most worn standing, their slightly flared corners turning over the fur collar of jackets.

The new collars constitute an extensive group, with a charm all their own. There are simple, dainty examples of lines and borders, ornamented with hand embroidery. And there are the elaborate creations of real lace for those whose purse know no limit. The revival of the velvet and the vast use of the velvet in the various smart frocks, in all colors and many pretty combinations. The latest French designs are in lace, chiffon and tulle.

Crepe de chine, always supple and graceful, is especially so this year.

What "Queen Quality" Signifies

YOU have no doubt seen the portrait of "Queen Louise" many times. It suggests daintiness, beauty, grace—above all, quality. It is because of this that her picture was chosen to represent Queen Quality Shoes.

Millions of women know by the experience of years that "Queen Quality" stamped on a shoe means beauty of design, correctness of style—and real comfort.

This ease and comfort is due to the exceptional flexibility of the sole. The shoe yields to every motion of the foot. It can be perfectly fitted and "breaking in" is never necessary.

A full line of these famous shoes now on exhibition.

WINDMILLS ALL OVER THE WORLD

What the COLOR of Your EYES TELLS About YOU

By Dr. LEONARD K. HIRSHBERG.
A. B., M. A., M. D. (Johns Hopkins).

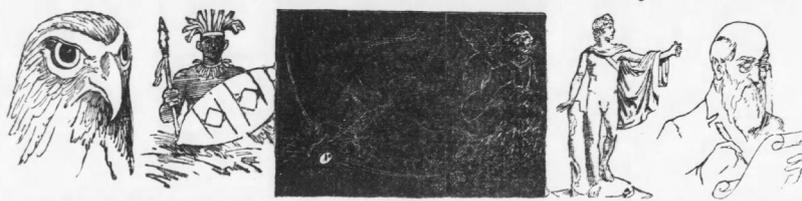

"THE Eagle, madame,
Hath not so green, so quick,
So fair an eye as Paris hath."

But you say, this may be very fine poetry, but it is not the truth, for there is there man or woman who really ever saw a green-eyed eagle? Indeed, there has never been any one to ever that eagle even have a jealous disposition. Most birds of prey, like most savages, have for the most part eyes of the darkest hues. This gives their blood nature an added ferocity. The evolutionists explain the preference of the black and brown eyes by pointing to the fact that the most vigorous savages and most powerful animals have them, hence it is a question of the survival of the fittest.

In a wild state of nature the blue eye is a handicap. It does not seem among the unaged human tribes and seldom among the brute creation. One savant maintains that the degree of civilization and efficiency present in any race is directly proportional to the number of blue eyes present.

Surprising as it may seem, Mr. W. H. Hudson, a noted English authority on the eyes of living animals, admits that "flashing" eyes do actually occur. He says that

Black and Brown Eyes Relics of SAVAGRY; Blue Eyes Show BRAINS; Some Eyes FLASH

Birds of Prey and the Savage Always Had Black or Brown Eyes. In Civilization Such Eyes Show Savage Affinities.

The Flashing or Phosphorescent Eye Really Existed. The Flying Lizard Had It; Man, with Rare Exceptions, Lost It With His Tail.

The Blue Eye Shows Man at His Highest. At Great Lawmakers Had Them. So Did the Apollo Belvidere.

the poetic metaphor of "sparkling, flashing, or scintillating" eyes is truly based upon observation. Not only does Mr. Hudson describe "an owl of fiery, flashing appearance," but he has met men with these blazing eyes. He says: "Eyes certainly do shine in the dark like those of owls, cats and night hawks." These fiery eyes are not always proof of anger in animals, but when you meet any man at night with flashing eyes it is evidence of anger.

Furthermore, this flaming appearance in the eyes is due to a kind of living phosphorescence, just as you see the greenish glow from certain phosphorescent bacteria and other plants. Light of such a sort arises from the heat vibrations in the living eye. Mr. Hudson is not averse to giving credence to certain traditional narratives about fiery-eyed dragons and other mammoth animals. He believes that many poetic exaggerations are based upon a modern of historical truth.

Fiery eyes in the human race, he contends, would necessarily decrease with civilization. As the causes of savage madras, of fierce and angry battles, and the need for conflict of purpose in the search for most and drink grew less and less as rugged nature gave way to the modern machinery of government, peaceful men and women, or even the standing armies that make war no longer have need for violent passions or hysterical outbursts.

The result would therefore be that in fact it is, to wit, the steady decrease in the number of phosphorescent, luminous or flaming eyes. Today it is only the remote, outlandish countries that give the scientist any great chance to study these fiery eyes. True enough, a street brawl now and then, or such an event as the Rosenthal murder, offers a brute with frenzied, alabaster face and raging, blazing eyes as a surviving example of such luminous eyes.

but such instances, it must be admitted, are few and far between.

Consider for a moment the various emotions of which man is subject. Think of the great emotion of races there are with regard to the color of the skin. There are dark skinned, red skinned, copper skinned, brown skinned, black skinned, yellow skinned, white skinned, blue skinned and many others. The human races are represented by as many colors of skin as there are hues in the spectrum. Yet what a paucity of eyes there is! Have you ever seen or heard of a human red eye, an emerald eye, an alabaster eye, an orange eye or any great series of colors? I believe not.

There are blue eyes, brown eyes, hazel eyes, gray eyes, black eyes and dotted brow or dotted gray eyes. That is all. The green eyes, so-called, in men and women, after all, merely a diluted blue eye.

Brown eyes are indications of deep feeling and quick susceptibility to individuals of the other sex. They usually mean liberality of feeling, a warm, clinging nature and a freedom from Puritanical prudery.

Black eyes are often found associated with strong passions and violent friendships. The deeper in color such eyes are, the more extreme are the likes and dislikes of their owners. The devotion, expressive eloquence and deep feeling evinced by men and women with the darkest eyes are all plainly apparent if you read the character through such orbs. Both brown and black eyes speak more of the emotions, more of the heart than of the head. They come direct from unaged savages. They bespeak softness, mildness, confidence and susceptibility. Heroines of the clinging, glib type always must have dark eyes. Dark-eyed women are also jealous.

Greenish, hazel and spotted eyes are accompanied usually with shrewd, quick, nervous, restless temperaments, according to Professor Hudson. Astatics with hazel eyes are cunning and weasel-like. Contrary to the popular notion, persons with green eyes are too indifferent in passion to be in any jealousy of the opposite sex; they are, however, fervently envious of their own. Blue-eyed beauties are known for their self-control, coldness, austerity and precision. They are severe and suspicious, and demand the continuous homage of those about them. Moreover, they are domineering and masterful, and wherever possible will be found to rule the roost.

Blue-eyed men are highly intellectual, morally firm and firm of mind. They are the rulers of their families, and the powerful figures in the moral, intellectual and industrial worlds. When a blue-eyed man meets a blue-eyed man Greek meets Greek; then comes the tug of war.

Among the gray eyed there are few who retain any spiritual emotions. People with gray eyes are superficial, frivolous, given to embraces false idols, running down blind allies, following false prophets, thoughtless, inconsistent, wanting in sympathy, neurotic, unstable, not firm and deliberate, but rash and impetuous.

In brief, each group of the various colored eyes has predominate characteristics. There are, of course, exceptions to the classification, but the data now available to the scientific statisticians go a great way in showing that a general system of character groups may be arranged according to the colors of the eye.

IT'S Heartful to LAUGH at Your Neighbor's MISFORTUNES

That grave and learned body, the British Medical Association, lately in convention at Birmingham, England, earnestly and solemnly agrees that every one should laugh as much as possible. As stated by Dr. W. McDougall, the origin of laughter and its beneficial properties are to this effect:

"Years ago, when man was in his early stages, he developed the feeling of sympathy for others. It was, indeed, a condition of his promotion above the animals. It formed the first step towards the social life.

Life, however, was a more rugged affair in those days. Each day provided a myriad of nasty knocks. Consequently if a man, in addition to being sorry for himself about every two minutes, was sorry for all his friends when they tarked their shins or had their dinner spoilt by an ichthyosaurus, he had to be in a perpetual state of "the hump."

That was why nature invented laughter. The minor troubles of his neighbors became a joke to primitive man; and, as everybody knows, laughter is a good medicine. Laughing at other people's troubles enabled our earliest ancestor to forget his own.

"Spencer," said Dr. McDougall, "regarded laughter as the bodily expression of an overflow of nervous energy."

"But take the case of a man who sits down on his own hat. This will generally move the spectator to laughter. In fact, I am told it is the one thing in the House of Commons which never fails to raise a laugh. Spencer suggested no reason why such a spectacle should liberate an excess of nervous energy."

"The procedure very commonly adopted has been to assume that when we laugh it is because we are pleased, and then to try to explain why we are pleased."

"This procedure has given rise to two famous theories."

"The theory of pure malevolence—that is, the nature of man to rejoice at the misfortunes and defects of his fellows. This was Aristotle's theory."

"The theory of self-conviviality proposed by Hobbes, according to which we rejoice on perceiving the misfortunes and defects of our fellows, because thereby by our own immunity from these same misfortunes is brought to our minds."

"What are the primary effects on the laugher? Laughter interrupts the train of mental activity, and so prevents the further play of the mind on the ludicrous object."

"The bodily movements of laughter hasten the circulation and respiration, raise the blood pressure, and bring about euphoria, or general well-being. Now we see why the requirement of laughter was worth while to the human species."

"Laughter is primarily the antidote of sympathy."

"Though it was important that we should sympathetically share the enjoyments of our fellows and feel sympathy with their more serious pain, it would have been a serious disadvantage to suffer sympathetically, in however small a degree, all the minor pains of one's fellow."

"Minor pains were so abundantly spread around in the early history of the human race that one would have been almost continuously subjected to this depressing influence, and one's vitality would have been seriously lowered."

"Some antidote for those too frequent and useless minor sympathetic pains became necessary, and laughter was acquired as a protective reaction."

"Both philosophers and common opinion have committed the error of confounding the laugh with the smile. The two reactions are distinct in origin and function. In the infant they appear at different dates."

"The smile appears about the third week. The laugh does not appear until about the end of the third month."

"As the philosopher Bergson points out, man is the only animal that laughs. He laughs only when he thoroughly enjoys and laughs, as all the others are immune to the ill effects of sympathy, because they do not feel that emotion."

"I would point out," says Bergson, "the absence of feeling which really accompanies laughter. It seems as though the comic could not produce its disturbing effect unless it fell, so to say, on the surface of the mind, and that it is unfeeling and unfeeling. Indifference is its natural environment, for laughter has no greater for this emotion."

"I do not mean that we could not laugh at a person who inspires us with pity, for instance, or even with affection, but in such a case we must, for the moment, put out affection out of court and impose silence upon our pity."

"In a society composed of pure intelligences there would probably be no more tears, though perhaps there would still be laughter; whereas highly emotional souls, in tune and unison with life, in whom every event would be sentimentally prolonged and reechoed, would neither know nor understand laughter."

"Try for a moment to become interested in everything that is being said and done, and in imagination be the man who act, and feel with those who feel; in a word, give your sympathy its widest expansion. As though at the moment a fairy wand you will see the flimsiest of objects assume importance, and a gloomy day spread over everything."

"To produce the whole of its effect, then, the comic demands something like a momentary anaesthesia of the heart's lines and ridges in the finger print. Thus, rather than suffer from sympathy with the sufferings of others—which will do them no good—you should laugh heartily—and 'forget it.'"

Trapping CRIMINALS Through Their PORES

At the recent meeting of the British Medical Association attention was directed to "poroscopy," a method of criminal and statistical registration of mankind which will no doubt at once be the source of a new crop of detective stories.

Dr. Leonard of Lyons, France, stands sponsor for the new dispensation, and his brief is held for the new scheme of measurements because he is personally convinced that it is the equal—and much easier of application—of the finger print method of Karl Pearson and A. Bertillon.

Dr. James B. Scott, of Brighton Beach, England, describes poroscopy as the science of the study and tabulation of the openings, orifices and canals of the sweat glands of the finger pulp, instead of the ridges and ridges in the finger print. He says the holes in Skiny's trousers cannot altogether be covered without reference to the slender remains of the cloth, but the sweat openings in the fingers can be recorded with no regard to the finger prints.

The sweat pores are caught as identification marks upon smoked glass, grease stains, mud, chalk, putty, or even a moist shiny surface. The dirt and perspiration alone are enough to obtain the printed dots and rings.

Dr. Scott reports a wonderful series of criminal detections due to the ingenious scheme of obtaining the stamp of the classification, but the data now available to the scientific statisticians go a great way in showing that a general system of character groups may be arranged according to the colors of the eye.

In other words, if a crime is committed and the perpetrator neglects to carry off his fingerprints, he is bound to be touched, the Bertillon bureau hereafter will by the procedure of finding only ten pores succeed in capturing the villain.

SALT Soil for CRISP RADISHES

In almost every section of this and, in fact, in other countries where the soil is fertile, it has been difficult in recent years to grow as fine crisp radishes as were grown in former years.

The trouble arises from the fact that a long hair-like worm or maggot eats into the radish, and these worms, if not considered dangerous, but they are ruining the radish crop in many localities. It was a serious question how to rid the soil of these pests.

They are white in color, and about the size of a thick hair up to that of a heavy knitting needle, and they vary in length from one-fourth of an inch to one inch in length. They burrow in the flesh of the radish, and in places almost entirely consume the root. They are less troublesome along the seashore, and the difficulty is to place salt in the sea level where no radish worms at all. This is evidence they do not thrive in salty places.

Experiments have shown that where these worms infested the radishes badly, the only way to prevent the difficulty is to place salt in the soil. Some planters place salt in a furrow, and then place earth on top of the furrow, and then place the radish seed in the soil over the salt. This is said to do the work. Others sow the seed, and then, as the radishes grow, the soil plants and all are sprinkled with a solution of salt water. This is declared to free the earth of the radish maggots, and the roots are fine and crisp.

SKINS That SOAP Makes DIRTIER

Most persons have long believed that a liberal use of soap and water insures bodily cleanliness. It will be a shock to learn, therefore, that a certain numerous type of persons have signs that soap only makes dirtier.

This is on the high authority of the London Lancet, the world's leading medical journal.

The active principle of all soaps is at salt, the action of which, ordinarily, is to separate and remove the fat which causes dirt and enable it to be washed away.

But it seems that certain skins are not proof against the action of alkali, and soap acts as a detergent because it forms an emulsion with dirt and the liberated fat which causes dirt.

are generally made with superior materials, and for that reason may be preferred. An interesting contribution on this subject appears in the reports recently issued from the laboratory of the Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh. In an article entitled "Soaps and their Effect on the Skin," Dr. Frederick Gardner points out that among the dearer toilet and superfatted soaps the proportion of mineral ash and alkali is at least as high as in the coarser types.

When an alkaline solution such as that of soap touches the skin there is induced, he says, both an excessive secretion of the acid sebaceous sweat, and a solvent effect on the protective epithelium. Reviewing the different ingredients found in soaps, he concludes that all those of the mineral nature are particularly irritating to the normal skin.

When a variety, he states, with the individual skin, and is more pronounced in sensitive and diseased skins. Cotton seed oil and rancid fats, according to his observations, are probably largely responsible for the irritant effects in cheaper soaps.

Castor oil soap, he finds, is least irritating, but it has the disadvantage of being too freely soluble and therefore wasteful, while it is apt to become rancid. Coconut oil soap is decidedly irritating, while palm oil soap, though an irritating variety is less so, and tallow soap shows a low irritating value.

If these deductions are correct Dr. Gardner thinks they supply a reason for the bad effects of modern domestic soaps as they are made mostly from cheaper soaps and the cheap oils, coconut and cotton seed. Formerly tallow and olive oil were more used and the evil effects of soaps were not so pronounced at that time.

TAKE the ROCKERS Off the CRADLE

The "hand that rocks the cradle" probably rules the world, but science has passed the judgment that the world would be better ruled if the "rockers" were taken off that cradle. This revolutionary decree in nurseryland is contained in a leaflet just issued by the Public Health Department of the City of London. This document is addressed to mothers, and among the counsels it imparts is the very serious advice—never rock the baby! It declares that in the interests of both mother and child the custom should be unreservedly condemned.

Rocking a baby to sleep is apt to set up various digestive disorders and stretches the child, and in any case uses him or her to bad habits. A healthy child requires no rocking off to sleep, but should, after being fed at the usual time, be put to bed in the dark and allowed to go off to sleep quite naturally. Cradle rocking is most unwise and may cause a child to grow up unhealthily, excitedly exacting and peevish.

It is quite true, because it is simple common sense, that if a child can be accustomed to going to sleep of its own accord, without the aid of rocking or singing or other attention the better it is for the child. And, of course, for the mother, who is then free to attend to other household duties.

The mother a baby to keep the better. Every baby should be fed, washed and put to bed at regular hours. Rocking is quite unnecessary. Such things as rocking cradles and rocking chairs are rarely found in the best class of hospitals.

The average mother's argument is apt to defeat itself—that these put them in practice. If men had the nursing to do they would insist on having specially fitted cradles, regular working hours, and other occupation of any kind—no saying nothing of a regular baby and no after expected to get through the night with a weeping baby after a hard day of housekeeping and looking after other children.

The answer is that if babies never were introduced to the diversion of cradle rocking, their mothers would escape that form of infantile tyranny—with a decided gain of leisure for their other duties.

A Collar That Keeps YOU From SNORING

SNORING is a nuisance even to those who indulge in this habit. When anyone snores his mouth is usually open, his tongue and cheeks become dry, the palate sags and flaps in the pulmonary breeze, the tonsils and other throat tissues begin to bulge, swell, and often become chronically enlarged, and germs, microbes and all sorts of lurking disease parasites find their way into the yawning cavern.

Snoring has been the bane of the physician and the torment of its victim. Of the legion of preventives, treatments and alleged cures, not one has as yet fulfilled its promise. New methods arise and old anti-snorering remedies are forgotten, but the snore, like the poor, hangs around forever.

With this fact well in mind Mr. P. Hering, a Prussian peasant of Kreuznach, Germany, has been for some time experimenting with various devices that are intended to put an end to the snore. Snoring around the Kreuznach region of Germany is so epidemic that it is said that the goose girls returning home late at night and starting forth early in the morning are commonly deceived by the snores of the villagers thereabouts. This confusion is at times so great that many a village sleeper is awakened by a goose girl who mistakes his snore for an escaping duck or goose.

The snore of the average Kreuznach inhabitant has a true Nibelungen motif in it. That is to say, it sounds like to some measured stroke of the quack, quack, quack or a duck or goose.

Hoping to reap an appropriate return for a method of relieving the peasants from their snores, Herr Hering has taken out a patent for a "snore preventer." It comprises a chin support shaped not unlike horse collar with a trough-like projection into which the chin fits snugly. It laces at the back of the neck like a bath.

The support thus given to the chin not only tends to keep the mouth closed, but keeps the tongue from sagging and obstructing the free passage of air—all causes of snoring.

Why FAT KING Were So POPULAR

There was for generations a custom in India of weighing the king, or ruler, in gold and giving that gold to the poor. The custom prevails today in some parts of India, and King George V, of England would have been weighed during his visit there, in keeping with the custom had it not been for the fact that he objected.

Perhaps this was because most Indian rulers were extremely fat reamers, while King George was very thin. At any rate, it was the fat monarchs who were most popular in olden days, for on the "weighing days" every additional pound of king meant so many more rupees for the poor.

A Maharajah who was recently crowned seated himself on one of the gold pans of the balance, while into the other was thrown gold coin until the royal scale rose in the scales.

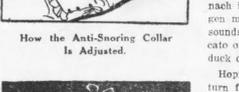

The Maharajah, by an unwritten law, did not become legally chief until he had been weighed in this manner. In olden times the custom prevailed of throwing the money into the air and letting the people scramble for it, and frequent loss of life and, moreover, defeated the object in view, as the strong and well-fed usually prevailed over those more in need of the benefits of the money.

After this a commission of Indian states, after the monarch had been weighed.

This custom of weighing monarchs is not so extravagant as it may appear to be. In the case of George V. it was calculated that one hundred thousand dollars in gold would be devoted to the weighing and the expenses of the entertainment, but this resulted in disorder and was necessarily determined by the bulk of the monarch. It is much more than was added to the fund as any number of persons desire to give. However, the native Indian potentates are usually heavy enough to satisfy all demands.

Last Long Sounds on Katherine Elkins

The Duke of the Abruzzi, Who Remains Unwed Because He Cannot Marry Miss Elkins.

William Hitt, the Most Persistent Lover in America.

"Billy" Hitt Finishes His Seven Years' Waiting, the Duke of the Abruzzi's Disapproving Sister-in-Law Sails in Despair to Wild Africa, and the Rival Suitors Demand Decision

ONCE again the pendulum swings around and the triangular love affair of the lovely Katherine Elkins, daughter of the late Senator Elkins, of West Virginia, the Duke of the Abruzzi, of Italy, and Willie Hitt, of Washington, takes a prominent place in the affairs of the moment. Once again is Miss Elkins called upon to decide whether she will reward her American lover for his faithful seven years' service, or whether she will choose to become the wife of her equally faithful ducal lover. This romance, so gripping in its interest, occupies the centre of the stage, because the American lover, persistent to the last degree, has just completed his seven years' service for the girl he loves, and she must decide once for all which of her two lovers she will marry.

The whole world looks on, for this romance is known even in darkest Africa, and wonders what the result will be now that the last gong has sounded on Katherine Elkins.

The Duke of the Abruzzi, cousin of the King of Italy, is a lover that any girl, even the most capricious American heiress, might choose. He is no weakling, but a keen, clever man of affairs, a noted explorer, a gallant soldier and a man of the highest character.

His courtship of the charming Miss Elkins, which extended over five consecutive years, kept Europe on the qui vive, for never was a lover more determined to win than the Duke. Since the final meeting between Miss Elkins and the Duke, the latter has been proffered many royal brides. He has only recently refused the hands of the Princess Elizabeth of Roumania, Princess Patriella of Connaught and Princess Olga, of Russia.

These refusals are said to have made clear the Duke's intention to marry Miss Elkins or to die a bachelor. And that he means to try his luck again is proven by the fact that he knows that Willie Hitt's seven years are up, and also because his haughty, eccentric sister-in-law, the Duchess d'Aosta, who has done more than any one else to keep him a bachelor, is leaving for South Africa to hunt big game.

Therefore there will be no active enemy at work in Rome to keep the Duke from again pressing his suit, and he will once more go to the mat with Willie Hitt, the most persistent lover in America. Which will win? Abruzzi, hampered by the disapproval of his family and all Roman society, or Hitt, who has served patiently and faithfully full seven years.

Who can tell the mind of a maid? Not even Katherine Elkins's closest friends know whether she means to take advantage of the two years' hunting trip on which her arch-enemy is embarking, or whether she will choose instead to reward her Jacob for his patient serving and waiting.

No romance of modern times has so interested both Europe and America as this love affair, which concerns an indirect heir to the throne of Italy and this most charming American girl. It began seven years ago, and it would have resulted happily long ago but for the bitterness and hatred of a most unhappy and disappointed woman, this jealous Helene of Aosta, wife of the Duke's oldest brother, at one time direct heir to Italy's throne. The whole weight of her power has been used to keep Abruzzi from marrying this "daughter of a coal dealer." At first she had the help of the Dowager Queen Margherita, but in the end the Dowager Queen changed her tactics and practically refused to interfere.

Just what a sinister foe to her happiness the Duchess d'Aosta has been, only Miss Elkins knows, and she has ever refrained from talking about the machinations of any of the royal women who would not let her be happy.

Seven years ago, when this romance was in its beginning, long before the public knew anything about it, William Hitt, son of the Reynolds Hitts, of Washington, added zeal to it by falling in love with the girl from the coal fields of West Virginia. He gave the Duke no favor, but pressed him on all sides. At that time Hitt was in high favor with Senator Elkins, who disapproved heartily of the Abruzzi affair and who wanted an American son-in-law. And Elkins, and his son, too, encouraged Hitt to keep everlastingly at it.

Even when the wedding date was named in the newspapers, Willie grinned and kept on devoting his life to Miss Elkins. Not even the fact that the wedding cake, a huge one thousand-pound affair, had been made, turned him from his course.

"Seven years will I serve for you, Duke or no Duke," said Willie to Katherine, "and then it will be for you to say yes or no."

But the Duke, in his turn, in the beginning gave the American lover no favor. He wooed Miss Elkins faithfully in secret from January, 1906, until December, 1908, when his secret was discovered and the dogs of diplomacy were let loose to thwart him.

It was perhaps because he realized the part these dogs of diplomacy would play in his romance that Willie Hitt held on so tenaciously. He felt it in his bones that the girl he loved would not be permitted to marry the Duke and so he waited.

And will the plum fall to the man who has played the part of the patient lover, or will the Duke, freed from the presence of his dominating sister-in-law, capture it?

Roman society, divided as ever in two camps, takes two views of the present situation. One is that the Duchess goes to Africa because she has relented and means to leave the Duke a free hand. The other is that she knows that Miss Elkins has decided to marry Hitt and so feels perfectly safe in leaving for her two-year trip.

"The Duchess must know that Miss Elkins means to marry her American lover," says one camp in Roman society, "else she would never go to Africa. She must feel perfectly safe."

"This hunting trip," says Washington society, "must mean that the romance is all off; let us begin to plan our wedding gifts for Willie and Katherine. At last the wicked Duchess has won her will."

But why should one woman, and one not born an Italian, have such power over the happiness of a royal Duke and an American heiress?

The Duchess of Aosta was Princess Helene of Orleans, a member of the French royal family of Bourbon. She married the Duke d'Aosta, first cousin of King Humbert at the time that he was heir to the throne of Italy.

The then Crown Prince was delicate and had said that he would never marry. The haughty Helene was not in love with Aosta, her heart was buried in the grave of the English Duke Clarence, oldest son of the then Prince of Wales. Clarence could not marry her for political reasons. He died shortly after becoming engaged to Princess Mary of Teck. Helene turned bitterly to Aosta and married him, expecting one day to become Queen of Italy. And then the Crown Prince fell in love with Elena of Montenegro and married her. She brought a strong, sturdy ancestry with her and has presented the throne with several daughters and one son, thus killing the Duchess d'Aosta's hopes.

If the Duchess had loved her husband she might have accepted the tragedy more equably, but she had married him simply to be made a queen, and in her soul has always scorned him.

When the Crown Prince married Elena, Helene removed herself from her husband's apartment in the royal palace, and when remonstrated with, said:

"It is now the business of the Crown Prince to provide for the succession. I shall not."

But when the first children born to the Crown Prince were girls, Helene changed her mind and presented her husband with two sons. There is always the possibility that one of these sons may become King of Italy, but it is so remote that the Duchess does not count on it at all.

Soured and hardened by her own tragedy, the Duchess wanted much of her anguish on the Elkins romance. She seemed absolutely glad of the chance to ruin some one else's life, as hers had been. The Duke of the Abruzzi is her youngest brother-in-law. Between him and the throne stand five lives—the delicate little Crown Prince, the Duke d'Aosta and his two sons and another brother, the Count of Turin, older than Abruzzi.

It was no difficult matter to enlist the members of his family against the duke, and certainly these foes of his own household were hard to combat. The Dowager Queen Margherita refused to have the engagement mentioned in her presence. She has an intense pride of birth and in her innermost soul has never considered her own daughter-in-law, the Queen Elena, as her equal. She quickly aided and abetted the Duchess in her campaign against the "foreigner," as all Italy called Miss Elkins. Feeling ran high in Roman diplomatic and social circles. It was even whispered that efforts would be made to exile the Duke should he persist in his wild determination to marry the "foreigner."

The Duke never for an instant dreamed of offering amorganatic marriage to the girl he loved. He intended then, as he intends now, to make her his Duchess or to remain unwed. It is unnecessary to say that the Elkins family would never consider any other form of marriage.

All the interesting phases of the royal wooing are recalled by the calling of this last round. It is confidently expected that history will repeat itself. That during the next few months, with the ever-rich Duchess safe in Africa, the Duke and Billy Hitt will fight to a finish. The Duke now has his brother, the Duke of Aosta, on his side, and there are rumors in Rome that the Duke himself ordered the Duchess to take this trip, so as to leave Abruzzi a clear field. If Abruzzi is to fail this time it will be because Miss Elkins prefers her American lover, rather

There is no doubt that to the average romantic maiden, the adventurous exploits of the Duke, his record as an Arctic explorer, as a soldier and as an aviator, must strongly appeal.

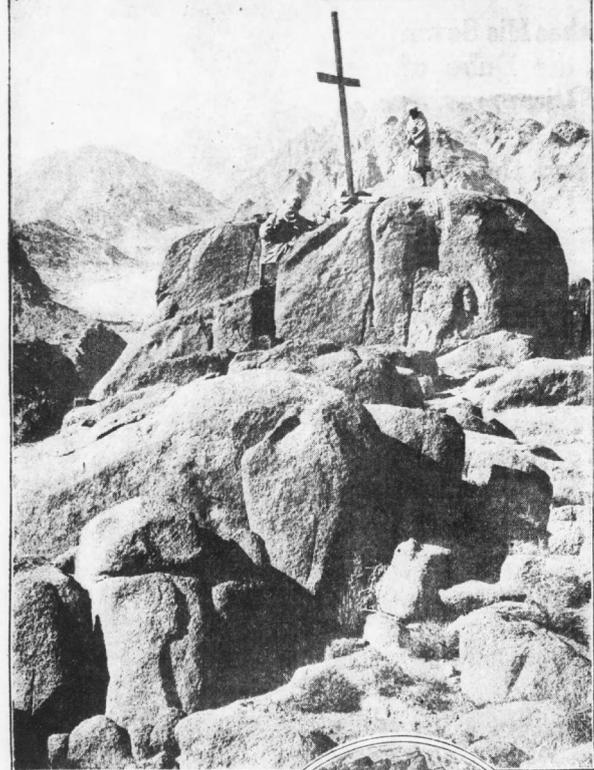

"He is a character from a novel," enthused one of Katherine Elkins's friends. "Why, oh why, does she not marry him in spite of the horrid Duchess of Aosta?"

Miss Elkins is to be in Paris next month. The Duke is also to be in Paris. "Billy" Hitt has written friends in Paris that he expects to be there not later than November 15. What will the result of this last round be?

To Search Holy Mt Sinai for the Original Gospel:

Hope of Finding a Manuscript in St. Luke's Own Handwriting and Perhaps Other Sacred Relics of Unparalleled Importance in the Strangest Library in All the World

The "Codex Sinaiticus." By some scholars it is dated as early as the fourth century, and in that case it is the oldest practically complete manuscript of the Bible. It consists of most of the Old Testament, all the New Testament and "the Epistle of Barnabas."

This wonderful collection of manuscripts Tischendorf carried away without saying a word to the monks. There are doubtless collectors to-day who would give $1,000,000 for these manuscripts. When the monks slowly realized that they had been robbed of one of the most precious possessions in the religious world, they became very angry, and their anger lasted a long time.

Five years travellers who visited the monastery reported that the monks were early and inhospitable, and would not afford a reasonable opportunity for an examination of their treasures. Many of these visitors reported that the monks were hoarding their manuscripts in a deplorable manner, using them as stands for cooking utensils and flower pots.

Finally, in 1844, two brilliant Englishwomen—Mrs. Smith Lewis and Mrs. Gibson—succeeded in winning the confidence of the monks and secured permission to make an examination of the library. Their search was richly rewarded, for they discovered a fourth century palimpsest manuscript of St. Paul's Gospel in Syriac. This is probably the oldest Greek Bible manuscript, for the Tischendorf codex, even allowing it the oldest date mentioned, would hardly equal it.

Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Gibson found that in order to put the library in thorough order and reveal even superficially all that it contained would require the labors of a considerable staff of trained workers. Although the monks gave facilities to the two women, they were not fit to admit any considerable

The Spot on Mount Sinai from Which Moses Is Reputed to Have Delivered the Ten Commandments to the Children of Israel.

NEXT to the Holy Land the most interesting region in the world to Biblical scholars is the Sinaitic peninsula. In one respect it is even more interesting than the Holy Land, for the wealth of relics and manuscripts which it contains has hardly been touched by modern investigators.

An important movement has now been started by the universities, scholars and religious leaders of England to conduct a thorough search of the Monastery of St. Catherine, on Mount Sinai, where it is believed that the oldest existing Bible manuscripts are to be found.

Discoveries already made indicate with practical certainty that these manuscripts must be there, but for peculiar reasons very little progress has been made in searching for them. During the years 1844, 1853 and 1859 the German scholar Tischendorf spent much time exploring the monastery library.

The monks were then very simple and hospitable and quite unfamiliar with the ways of the outside world. They allowed Tischendorf to do as he pleased in the library. He used this liberty with astoundingly profitable results to himself. He discovered the oldest known Greek manuscript of the Bible, now known as

Why Baby Should Learn to Use Both Hands

WHY the human race is right-handed is one of the problems that pop up again and again. The theory which has found general acceptance is that propounded by Dr. Ernst Weber, who sought to prove that primitive man, in his desire to protect the heart, carried the shield in his left hand, and the aggressive weapons in the right.

Sir Daniel Wilson, however, ascribes the right-handedness of the human race to a very different cause. The centre of speech is in the left hemisphere of the brain, and Dr. Wilson believes that the movements controlled by the right arm, the nerve ganglia for which are situated near the centre of speech, have developed and matured along the same lines and at the same rate of progress as language.

Records dating back to primitive times, parchments and the figures portrayed by the ancient Chaldeans and Egyptians, all point to the fact that even in those early days the race was right-handed, so that the tendency towards right-handedness must have begun very early. It probably sprang into life simultaneously with the tendency toward color

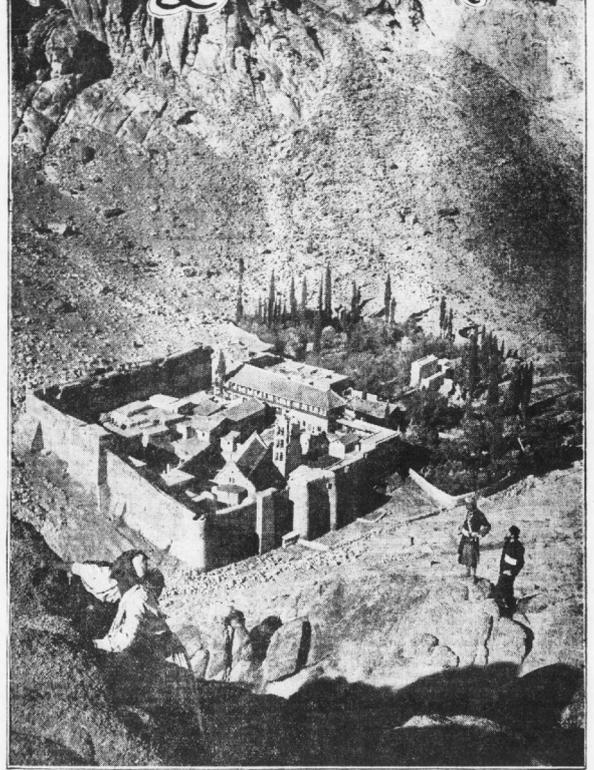

There has been much talk lately in regard to teaching children to use both hands. Originally, in prehistoric days, there were two centres of speech, one in either hemisphere of the brain. Left-handed children save their centre of speech in the right hemisphere instead of the left, and while, in teaching them to use their right hand their left hand, but would not have its power of speech naturally impaired.

Dr. Wilson's theory, that right-handedness was caused by proximity of motor and speech centres is borne out by the experience of a German poet of renown, who, suffering greatly from writer's cramp at an advanced age, began to use his left hand in writing. He was amazed to find that after the first infrequent attempts to write with the left hand he felt crowding upon him a wealth of imagery and a plethora of ideas such as he had known since early youth. He ascribed this to the fact that the left hemisphere of the brain induced by use of the left hand,

There would thus be a double purpose in teaching children to use both hands, as in developing both speech centres, in case of injury to the left portion of the brain, the child would not only be able to use its left hand, but would not have its power of speech naturally impaired.

The present movement aims to overcome the objections of the monks in a friendly manner. The Sinaitic Peninsula is now in Egyptian territory. When the necessary funds have been collected the assistance of the Egyptian authorities will be sought in carrying out negotiations with the monks.

Among the most precious manuscripts believed to be in the monastery is the original of the Gospel of St. Luke in the handwriting of the Apostle himself. This would be a comparatively the most important Bible manuscript ever discovered. The Syriac copy of St. Luke's Gospel found by the two English women and at present constituting the oldest known Bible manuscript contains evidence that it was translated from a Greek original in the library.

Scholars hold that the original Gospel of St. Luke was in Greek. The Apostle was a physician of Greek descent, and his gospel gives evidence of scholarly attainments. Early chronicles state that the manuscript of St. Luke's gospel was one of the treasures given to the monastery by the Emperor Justinian in 527 A. D. The building contains numerous representations of the Apostle writing his gospel, and these appear to have a close association with the foundation of the establishment.

The library is known to contain about 200 ancient volumes filled with manuscripts in Greek, Arabic, Syriac and other languages. As one of these great volumes may contain hundreds of manuscripts, the wealth of the library can only be guessed at. Among its curiosities, is a very ancient complete manuscript of the Psalms, written on its leaves in microscope writing.

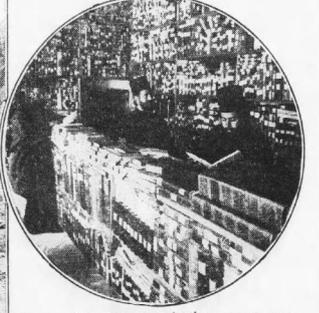

This monastery is the oldest consecrated building in the world. It was founded by Justinian in about 527 A. D., and has been occupied ever since. It is surrounded by walls thirty feet high, and defended by cannon for it was cut off from the civilized world for centuries. Until recently everybody who entered was hoisted by a rope

Finally the death of Moses.

The Sinaitic Peninsula covers about 10,000 square miles, and there was plenty of room for the forty years' wandering. The traveller who sees the land today can easily understand why miracles were necessary to keep the children of Israel alive. It is an exceedingly barren wilderness, largely composed of rocks. It only maintains a handful of natives, and it is believed that no number has hardly changed since prehistoric times. Though barren, the land is very picturesque, and the red mountains rising abruptly into the clear sky are wonderful.

Nearly all the sites mentioned in Exodus and the other books of the Old Testament are identified by the monks and by local traditions. There is a peak called Jabal Rasees-Safar, which is said to be the exact spot from which Moses witnessed the worshiping of the golden calf by the children of Israel. It is a small peak, giving an excellent view of the same group where the leader of the chosen people received the Ten Commandments from heaven. The local traditions ascribing sites to these ancient occurrences seem very reasonable.

And he took the calf which they had made and burnt it in the fire and ground it to powder and strewed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it.

Circedy Lady Sackville-Beaten at Last!

How the Daughter of the Former English Ambassador Cast Blame on Her Mother's Name to Win One Tainted Fortune, and Sacrificed Herself for Another, Only to Have Her Daughter's True Love Turn Her Wealth Into Dead Sea Fruit ville think of relinquishing the title for which she had married her cousin. She took charge of her husband's case from the start, directing every move made by the defense. She fought her sisters at the same time, for they were eager to prove their brother the heir, as doing so would prove them legitimate also.

Lady Sackville, Whose Effort to Win the Famous Scott Will Case Added Five Million Dollars to the Fortune Which Her Daughter Spurns.

Against the proceuder and his younger sisters stood this older sister, fighting grimly for her title and for Knole Park, one of the greatest show places in England. Determined to hold them at all costs, she blackened her mother's name and, indeed, furnished the most damning proof of her own and her brother's illegitimacy by presenting to the House of Lords Committee on Privileges her birth certificate, in which she was recorded as the daughter of Josephine Howard, a danseuse. The name of her father, Lord Sackville, was omitted, as is always the case in France when the mother of a child is unwed. The claim was decided in favor of Lady Sackville's husband. The ambitious woman thus reached what she then thought was her highest goal.

The cost of proving himself heir to the title and estates almost bankrupted Lord Sackville, as they followed closely upon the very heavy taxation he had to pay as well as the expenses of his cousin's property. From this his painful situation his wife rescued him through her friendship with the enormously wealthy old banker, Sir John Scott. He gave the Sack-

Lady Sackville. The Scott relative, contented the will last Spring, claiming that Lady Sackville had hypnotized their brother, that she had stolen into his library to hunt for his will; that she had pursued him at all times and at all hours. They swore on the stand that she had been responsible for their mother's death, and that in the Scott family the Sackvilles were called "the hungry locusts," and her Ladyship in particular as "the earthquake."

Every argument put forth by the Scott lawyers was refuted by Lady Sackville's cleverness, and in the end the jury awarded her the bulk of the Scott fortune, which may amount to over $7,000,000. It includes a Park Lane mansion and one in Paris.

Lord Sackville on the stand swore that he approved of this friendship and that Scott had of his own free will paid a mortgage of $100,000 on Knole Park.

It was testified that Sir John Scott liked to sit by Lady Sackville while she let her glorious hair fall over her shoulders, but the jury found he had exercised no undue influence over him.

As Lady Sackville sees herself possessed of the fortune she fought for, she knows that, in a next, she has paid for it. She showed her with nearly one day and quarrel with her next. Among his gifts to her were many jewels of great value, an emerald bracelet worth $25,000 and checks that ran up into the hundred thousands.

In 1911 Sir John weakened in his allegiance to his friend, and told her he had changed his will, leaving the bulk of his fortune to his family. Lady Sackville then wrote a pitiless letter to a friend, in which she said: "It tells me he has made all his new arrangements about his will, leaving everything he dangled before

The Honorable Victoria Sackville-West, Whose Deep Love for a Commoner Upsets Her Mother's Hope for a Titled Son-in-Law.

London, Oct. 1. THE Napoleonic Lady Sackville, otherwise known as "the sweetest woman in England," has received a setback. After winning every struggle in which she has been engaged, her own daughter has defied her and beaten her. Lady Sackville is the woman who won the recent sensational Scott will case in England. She had previously won many other social triumphs. She had a great title and historic estates in the face of apparently insurmountable obstacles.

Born with a Napoleonic ambition, this woman, the daughter of a common Spanish dancer and the late Lord Sackville, once Minister at Washington, has spared no one—neither mother, father, sisters nor husband—in the pursuit of her aims. Ready to sacrifice her daughter, too, she has for the first time in her career come face to face with a person she cannot control.

Possessed to-day of the title and estates, to keep which she blackened her mother's reputation, and of the Scott fortune, to keep which she held herself and her husband up to the jaws of Europe, Lady Sackville's next ambition was to marry her daughter, the Honorable Victoria Mary Sackville-West, to Viscount Lascelles, heir to the Earl of Harewood. But the Honorable Victoria Mary, displaying equal determination, refused to sacrifice herself to her mother's selfish ambition, and starting the trial of the will case announced her engagement to a commoner, young Mr. Harold Nicholson, whose father, instead of being an earl, is an assistant clerk in the House of Commons.

Lady Sackville denied the engagement, but her daughter smiled grimly and announced it again. There could be but one outcome to the struggle, for the Honorable Victoria Mary is in will power at least, a second edition of her mother, well able to beat down all who oppose her, even that have been issued, and all England is pleased with the knowledge that the greedy, selfish Lady Sackville has met her Waterloo at last. The millions she fought fate to get have failed to bring her the one greater thing she craved—a titled son-in-law. But why should Lady Sackville expect to have this fortune bring her happiness? It is a fortune founded and fattened on dishonor. Its history reeks with intrigue. It has been handed down from court favorites to lovers, from unwed mothers to legitimate sons. And as the wealth she now holds is flavored with dishonor, so also is Lady Sackville's family history.

In 1881 Sir Lionel Sackville-West was British Minister to Washington. Later he was dismissed for attempting to influence an American Presidential election. He had no wife, but his three daughters and a son lived with him in his Washington home. The eldest girl, then in her teens, was good looking, vivacious and very overbearing. She assumed all the prerogatives of an Ambassador, gave herself great airs and was quite generally disliked. Washington diplomatic society objected to receiving the Sackville-West children, for the fact that Sackville-West had not married their mother, who died in 1871, was very well known. After being dismissed from Washington Sackville-West inherited the title of Baron Sackville.

It was while she was in Washington that Miss Victoria Sackville-West, as the Minister's daughter was called, discovered the means of marrying her first cousin, Lionel, who would succeed to the title at her father's death. Knowing that her brother, like herself, was illegitimate, this seemed the one sure way to make herself a woman of title. The Sackville family acknowledged the existence of the children of the Spanish dancer, but there was a keen struggle to keep the heir from marrying Miss Victoria.

But Victoria won. No son was born to the young couple. Thus did fate strike her first blow against the ambitious woman. A daughter was born, but no woman can inherit the Sackville title. When this girl was sixteen years of age fate struck another terrible blow. Lord Sackville, the former Minister, died, and at the moment that Lionel Sackville-West came into the title and the magnificent estates, Henry, the natural son of the Spanish dancer, put in his claim for them on the ground that his parents had been married.

The fight for the Sackville peerage is a historic one in English society. Not for an instant did Lady Sack-

"Take your ill-gotten gold," cries the Honorable Victoria. "I do not want it, if its possession means the giving up of my lover."

ville sufficient money to pay off their debt and put their historic mansion at Knole Park in repair. Scott died in 1913. In his will he left $5,000,000 to his dear friend, my weary eyes for ten years away from his love."

The anxiety of that time wrought great havoc in Lady Sackville's health and face. Wrinkles marred her beauty. Her temper grew more and more. Life was a horror. Then Sir John died and the face of the sword changed. He had never changed his will as he threatened. "The fortune was hers."

But the sisters of Sir John, furious at the trick fate had played them, contested the will, but lost in the end.

Will Lady Sackville be allowed to enjoy the fated Scott millions in peace? Not if their past history affects the future. If ever there was an unsavory fortune, this Scott fortune is that one—founded and nourished on dishonor indeed.

Its foundations were laid nearly a century ago by Isabella, second wife of the second Marquis of Hertford. She was the most powerful favorite of George IV, winning him away from Mrs. Fitzherbert, with whom he had contracted an ecclesiastical marriage. She extorted from him large gifts of money and property—even art treasures and crown jewels. She had one son, the Earl of Yar-mouth, afterward third Marquis of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair." He greatly increased this fortune by marrying a celebrated beauty, Maria Fagniani, who had inherited much wealth from three men, each of whom supposed himself to be her father. The old Duke of Queensberry left her $500,000 as well as country places and a number of houses, designating her as his daughter. George Sackville left her a fortune and her mother's husband, an Italian nobleman, left her his estates.

But the Marquis of Hertford did not long enjoy his wife's presence or wealth. She presented him with an heir and then went to Paris, where four years later, she had another son whom she called Henry Seymour, and later a third son whom she named Richard Wallace. When the Marchioness of Hertford died she left her whole fortune to her oldest son, who was then fourth Marquis of Hertford. Old enough, there was a great attachment between the Marquis and the illegitimate Richard Wallace, his half-brother. When he died, in 1870, he left all his fortune— that received from his father, which had been founded by the King's favorite, and that received from his mother—to his half-brother. Thus this dishonored but great fortune passed from the Hertford family.

This fortune enabled Richard, at the age of forty-five, to marry the lady who had passed as his wife for twenty-three years and who was the mother of his son, Edmund.

The Wallace, in spite of the irregularity of their marriage, made some friends in England, but Queen Victoria refused to recognize Lady Wallace, although she had knighted Richard Wallace for his services to England in the days of the Commune.

In 1875 Sir Richard engaged a private secretary, son of a poor Scotch surgeon, John Scott. This secretary lived with the Wallace until Sir Richard died, in 1901. All his fortune, now numbering some $10,000,000, was left to his widow.

John Scott continued to serve Lady Wallace during the eight years of her widowhood. On her death, in 1908, she left her vast art collection to the British nation and all her money to the secretary, who, at one bound, became a multi-millionaire and a man of considerable importance in London.

And it is this fortune, with its unsavory history, that Lady Sackville fought for and that her daughter spurns. It is the fortune that she shares with her commoner husband, young Harold Nicholson, son of an assistant clerk in the House of Commons.

Woman's Skin a Favored Book-Binding in Paris

BOOKS bound in woman's skin are reported to be greatly sought after by French bibliophiles and collectors of artistic curiosities.

In the Great Clerical Library, recently sold at auction in Paris, there were two books bound in this choice manner. One was a work entitled "Good Things That Have Been Said of Women," by Emile Deschamps.

The other had an inscription to Latin, which translated reads as follows: "This book concerning women was bound in a woman's skin that it might be more agreeable. Witnesses: Edmond Crozet, F. Raymond, A. Michard."

Another book in the same collection was described in the catalogue as follows: "A book of the life of a young woman makes an exquisite binding, very smooth and agreeable to the touch. The skin of Madeleine Crozet, Noly Marley, or any of the noted Parisian beauties of the day would be greatly sought after by collectors if it could be obtained in its present state."

The publication which reports these facts says that it has been unable to find who were the women who furnished the binding or under what circumstances they supplied it.

It is stated that the skin of a young woman makes an exquisite binding, very smooth and agreeable to the touch. The skin of Madeleine Crozet, Noly Marley, or any of the noted Parisian beauties of the day would be greatly sought after by collectors if it could be obtained in its present state.

THE STORY OF MY LIFE

By Evelyn Thaw

Third Instalment of the Most Extraordinary Human Document Ever Written--Stranger Than Any Story in Fiction or Drama

Synopsis of the Two Previous Chapters of Evelyn Thaw's Own Story:

ON this page is published to-day the third instalment of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw's remarkable story of her life.

In the earlier chapters heretofore published in this newspaper she narrated in a frank, straightforward manner the incidents of her early years as she remembered them.

Upon the death of her father, "Win" Nesbit, a lawyer of Tarentum, Pennsylvania, the Nesbit family, consisting of the widow, Evelyn and her brother, moved from place to place in a constant struggle for existence.

They eventually landed in New York, where Evelyn sought to keep the wolf from the door by posing as an artists' model.

Her rare beauty of face and form made her one of the most popular of models, and her photograph was published in the newspapers. Then followed a succession of offers from theatrical agents, which ended in her joining the chorus of the famous "Florodora" musical comedy company.

She analyzed with remarkable introspection her youthful impressions as artists' model and chorus girl, telling of the little supper parties to which she was almost nightly invited after the theatre, and thus she paved the way to the recital of her meeting with Stanford White.

Her estimate of Stanford White is an astonishing and unexpected bit of analysis. It may be summed up in the phrase she uses in referring to him: "He was a benevolent vampire."

She told of the first feast in White's luxurious studio apartments on West Twenty-fourth street of a swing in which he made her swing so high that her feet went through a paper umbrella on the ceiling. She told of subsequent visits to White's private quarters in Madison Square Garden, during all of which he affected to be most concerned in her moral welfare, restricting her to a single glass of champagne and insisting upon her returning home at a seasonable hour. He had her pose in gorgeous costumes at one of his "studios," and in a hundred different ways convinced both Evelyn and her mother of his absolute honor and integrity.

Then he suddenly dropped the mask of disinterested patronage and revealed himself in his true colors.

Chapter III.—Stanford White Sets the Seal on His Fate;

Written by Evelyn Nesbit Thaw.

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

THERE is a type which peeps with insatiable curiosity at anything which is tagged "private." It has an irresistible temptation to open any letter, pass through any door and unearth any plan which bears that label. That type is largely represented because curiosity is the besetting virtue of an age which has come to maturity by finding out things for itself. There are episodes in our lives which we would desire to forget if we could only avoid that one moment of publicity which makes the public as wise as we are. Let that one moment come and one's memory is no longer one's own. It is no longer in your discretion to remember or forget. We have taken to ourselves willy nilly a remembrance which is at once a Conscience and an Indel.

A secret jealously guarded so that it was but a pinhead or memory swells and swells so that it fills the world. In every newspaper office it is indexed and tabulated in the dusty files of official records, in the minds of those who love the secrets of others. It is a frightening experience to hear a thought to which you have never given even words babbling aloud in the street. It takes on a new horror, it garnishes memory with a new shame. It sets you frantically anxious to amend, to contradict, to correct. Your little secret is everybody's secret now. It has gained its importance, has been twisted in detail, until it is like nothing you ever knew.

If all the stories of Stanford White and myself and Harry Thaw and other people who figured so largely in my life are to be stripped of their excesses and brought down to the bareness and the clearness of truth, I must in this book speak about that which I would rather forget.

I write this chapter a little cold-bloodedly. I must do that, or I should not write it at all. I must tell all that is to be told, because around this night which I will describe circled the tragedy which destroyed the life of one man and helped to undermine the reason of another, and dragged me into the fierce light of publicity and of criticism, an experience which would otherwise have been avoided.

I Went to His Studio a Child.

In the course of the trial, to which I shall make reference later, the prosecuting attorney, speaking under stress of some emotion, said there was no one to speak for Mr. White save himself. That is not true. I would speak of White with as great a charity as any lawyer. I can more easily find explanation for his character than could those who did not know him so well as I. In the balance between the living and the dead, the dead who have suffered for their acts, and the living who may still be suffering, the weight of prejudice most favors the living, for the dead are asleep, and are unconscious of the purple criticism of the men and women whose views they so despised in their lifetime.

Stanford White was a member of a small clique of men who had vicious tendencies. I am not speaking disparagingly when I use the word "vicious." I am merely stating what I think to be an obvious fact. If he had only had a weakness for drunkenness, if he had been a spendthrift, or guilty of some crime which made him amenable to the laws of the land; if, in fact, he had committed any act which had no effect upon my career or upon my life, I would speak just as dispassionately.

Nature is very cruel; it is merciless and remorseless. The instruments of the great scheme, their sufferings, their torments, are as nothing. All that counts is that certain laws should be obeyed, certain instincts fulfilled, and if civilization has overlaid us with delicates and refinements, nature works on just as though social laws had no existence.

The strong are as cruel to the weak as ever they have been, and there are brutalities which are as far outside the governance of laws now as ever they have been.

I went to the establishment at Twenty-fourth street that night a child, with no knowledge of the big and stunning facts of life other than any other child has, and if you say to me, "how is it possible that you could live in such an atmosphere as you did, surrounded by significant evidences as you were, that the world was less than the idyllic place you pretend, and still be innocent?" I reply that there is an innocence which finds for evident evil an innocent explanation.

I remember that I was hungry, and the supper he offered me was acceptable, and the comfort of the place was pleasing. Think of this cozy room, with its shaded lights, its thick carpets, its divans, its rare objects of art. There was no jarring note in the composition, no picture that offended or any touch of color that irritated. Not to my eyes was there any note of decadence which might cause the slightest uneasiness; a pleasant meal with a pleasant man, a sense of security and well being—that is my memory of that night.

My mother was out of town. I was alone in New York, under the guardianship of Stanford White. I was utterly and entirely at his mercy. He dominated me by his kindness and by his authority. He abused the sacred trust which had been put into his hands; nothing else matters.

Let me repeat here the few words with which I closed the last chapter of my story.

It was the night following my visit to the photographer that I went to dine with White. He had sent me a note asking me to one of his parties, and I went without any fear of consequences to the Twenty-fourth street house. Young people very easily get familiar with the ways of folk, and when I walked into the room where White was, it was without hesitation, and perhaps with something of a proprietorial air, since I had come to regard him as being bound to me by some vague relationship. The table was laid, but only White was waiting.

"Where are the rest of the people?" I asked, a little astonished.

Stanford White was all apologies. "Isn't it too bad," he protested, "these people have turned us down."

The Cast of "The Wild Rose"—Evelyn Indicated by the Arrow.

At the time this photograph was taken she began to receive letters from Thaw—written under an assumed name—once accompanied by money.

I was terribly disappointed, because the people were as interesting as the dinner, and he must have seen my look of disappointment.

"You're not worried about them, are you?" he asked.

I nodded. "Yes, I am," I said. "I am very sorry, for there will be no party now."

I suppose I showed my disappointment very clearly.

"Never mind," he said, "we will eat alone."

He drove back a chair from the table and we sat down. It was one of those comfortable little meals when nothing of importance happened. We just talked and talked, and since he was one of the most interesting men in New York I was not bored. He left me alone for a little while after supper, and I made preparations for going home. He came back in a very short time.

"You're not going?" he said.

"Some instinct must have warned me, for it was not usual for me to go home so early."

"Stay," he pleaded, "there is a lot in this house you have never seen, and it will amuse you."

He talked about the furnishing of the place. He had brought this article from Venice, that from London, that from China.

"I have another room upstairs, which you have not seen," he said, and he led the way up a tiny flight of stairs which I had not seen before.

"I want you to see all my beautiful home," he said.

It seemed to me that the wine tasted unusually bitter. "I don't much care for this," I said, with a wry face.

"Oh, drink it up," he said banteringly, and I drained the glass.

He was talking to me about the room—talking easily and naturally. There was nothing in his voice or what he said that might suggest anything out of the ordinary, when I experienced a curious sensation.

There began a busting and a drumming, a persistent thump—thumping in my ears. I felt dizzy and sick, and the objects in the room became blurred and indistinct. The sound of his voice came to me as of one speaking from a great distance—then all went black.

It may have been an hour or two hours later when I came to consciousness. I was lying in a room that was walled with mirrors—the ceiling was a mirror—mirrors were everywhere. And Stanford White was there.

I could not realize what had happened. All that I knew was that something terrible had come to me, and I screamed.

With terror in his face he tried to stop me.

"For God's sake, don't!" he pleaded.

It was horrible—horrible. I knew without understanding. What happened after I cannot tell. I do not remember dressing or going home, I recollect sitting on a chair by the window of my room and watching the dawn come up over the great city.

I Meet Harry Thaw

The Most Famous Photog

I sat cramped and shivering, thinking, thinking, as the chair Stanford White found me when he came in the morning. I felt nothing, neither repulsion nor hate. He was a change being to me; an aspect of life revealed in a flash and changing all my perspectives.

How White "Justified" Himself.

And here it was, pleading with me, kneeling on the floor by my side, kissing the hem of my gown in an extravagance of grief, that he did me the greatest wrong of all, for to examine myself he blackened all humanity to one drab and sordid hue.

Everybody was bad, everybody was evil. Evil was the basis of life.

So he ran on.

That woman was bad—that man was vicious. He mentioned names easily. Society people, stage people, every rank and class of society, they were all steeped in evil. He was no worse than other men, a little better by his own showing. He illustrated his argument with stories . . .

There was one sin which all the world would recognize as such—the sin of being found out—that was unforgivable. You must just go along as if nothing had happened and people would respect you.

And it was a terrible thing to talk. A girl must never talk, she must just keep things locked up in her bosom and let it be nobody. It was unpardonable to chatter—look at Miss . . . if she hadn't told things about people she would have been in a splendid position. "Don't talk, Evelyn--tell nobody, and nobody will know."

Most important of all I must not tell my mother. To tell one's mother things meant all the world knowing. Mothers never kept things to themselves.

So he went on, sometimes pleading, sometimes covertly menacing, and I listened, dazed and bewildered, as all the fair fabrics of my faith crumbled into dust. He was convincing to a point, and that point was the instinct which is implanted in every heart--the scale which weighs good and evil. He was older and so much wiser and cleverer--and I was so young.

No human soul can stand alone. Cut out the faith and the trust and you must substitute something for it to lean upon. I listened and disbelieved and trusted. I had to build up a new faith, and I needed a scaffolding, a shell from whence to work. I never wholly accepted Stanford White's creed, it was too rotten a foundation to build my life upon, but from a raging sea even a quicksand makes solid foothold to the wrecked mariner, and quicksand served until I reached firm earth.

Courted by Thaw Under a False Name.

I cannot remember now whether I knew Harry Thaw before the events recorded in the last chapter. I used to receive at the theatre letters from a very persistent correspondent, asking me to lunch. They were written under an assumed name, and were evidently from a man of some refinement. Once they came accompanied by some money, which I sent back. As in the case of White, my actual meeting with him was through the instrumentality of a girl friend.

My first impression of Mr. Thaw was an unpleasant one: I met a man whose face alike attracted and repelled me. There was a curious look in his eyes, a sinister brutality about the mouth which had an unpleasant effect upon me, and our first meeting--it was at a restaurant, and, as I say, I had the society of another girl--was made up of a fairly harmless quarrel between himself and myself, the subject being the beauty of a member of the chorus. Harry Thaw spoke unkindly of her and I remember I defended her. I left him with the sense of relief one secures when one gets through with a disagreeable person. I had no desire to meet him again. I was not very much interested, if the truth be told; at best, he was a pleasant young man who paid me the compliment of admiring me from the other side of the footlights. He was not, of course, the only person who wrote me letters expressing a wish to make my acquaintance. A girl on the stage receives such letters in shreds from all sorts of people, good, bad and indifferent, and when I had met him I thought merely that his curiosity was satisfied and there was an end of it.

But he was indeed persistent. He pursued me with his harmless attentions. It was after another such party to which I had been invited, and the invitation to which I had accepted, that he revealed himself to me. We had come from the restaurant, and I was entering the theatre, when all of a sudden he said, with almost dramatic earnestness: "I am not -- (the man whose name he had given), I am Harry Thaw, of Pittsburgh."

I looked at him with some amusement. He was so earnest; there was such a trembling pride in his voice; a disguised Napoleon revealing himself to a nearsighted veteran could not have made the revelation with greater aplomb. I do not know what he expected me to do. I had an uncanny feeling that I should slager back, or should turn pale, or should do something else to say. He was "Harry Thaw, of Pittsburgh"--that was all and so very like Harry. Indeed, so characteristic was it that I do not think I ever knew him much better at any subsequent time than I did at that moment.

I contented myself by saying, "Indeed!" There seemed little else to say. He was "Harry Thaw, of Pittsburgh"--that was enough. In one minute he had told me the full story of his condemnation, the explanation of those letters written under the nom de plume Harry Thaw, of Pittsburgh, was Somebody.

It irritated and amused me, this attitude of his. But even a pose, so long as it is consistently upheld, is impressive. Men who acclaim their own importance persistently and with no sign of hesitation as to their own conviction on the subject, cease to be nobodies and become Somebodies. And the egotism which promoted Harry's sentence and which appeared in all his dealings with the remainder of humanity at once fascinated and annoyed.

Harry Thaw was an earnest young man. There was a side of him which was rather terrible, as you may learn. He was very earnest, no philianderer, no light liver; even in his infidelities he was absorbed and sincere. Such matters were serious propositions, presenting aspects which would not occur to the normal man.

When his mind took that turn he played at reformer with all the enthusiasm of a Savonarola. He was very earnest about himself. He took Harry Thaw and his position in life very seriously. It has always been a wonderful thing to me that he has not written the story of his life. Perhaps it is because he does not possess the sense of humor which makes such a performance possible.

He took his position seriously; his world value too seriously. Like many egotists there was a very gentle and kindly side to him. It would be an ungracious thing to say that such gentleness and sweetness was part of his egotism. Let me put all his generosity to his credit, for it was only his arrogance of thought and action which was to bring about his downfall.

My Acquaintance with White Continues.

His persistence was of a fine order. He never left me alone; he was everlastingly following me up. He was not offensive, nor was his attitude one to which I could take any exception. In course of time I grew to like him and to regard him as a dear and reliable friend. He introduced me to his mother, and became acquainted with my own mother, and the course of our friendship ran fairly smoothly. It was long after the events which I have described in a previous chapter that he became a factor in my life. The miserable friendship between Stanford White and myself was in progress. Faithful to my promise, I had told nobody. I had accepted his conception of life with a dull sense of helplessness. Here was a phase of humanity which I could not change, here was a strong stream running which I could not breast; I must go for a time at my rate with the stream if I would find it bearable.

An enormous cataclysm which comes to a young life leaves little impression on the spirits of the child. Doctors say that children who lose their limbs in accidents come to maturity with a sense of having been born as they are, without any recollection of previously having been better equipped for the battle of life. Young people who lose their parents at my age have the greatest difficulty in retaining a memory of those parents, however kindly and how ever apparently indispensable they may have been in their lifetime. It may seem a shocking thing that I did not become melancholic, or so depressed as to take no interest in life; but a healthy child--and I was only sixteen, he it remembered--abhors bad memories and all the gloomy, morbid machinery of introspection, and I found myself almost as I had been before that night, with interests as keen, with as poignant a sense of humor as ever, though a change had come to me and though my angle of vision had altered.

There was one frolic into which I got which alarmed White. I believe that he was genuinely fond of me, and that he took an unselfish pleasure in making my life brighter. He arranged holidays for me, saw that I should not suffer from lack of work, and generally was good and kind. But on an all-night party, of which I was a member, irked him.

I must go to school, he said. I was not fitted for the work I was doing; I must fit myself for life as I would find it.

It was a dismal prospect for me, to be lifted out of the light and glitter of Broadway to the quiet and peaceful dullness of a convent school, and it did not appeal to me. But he said my piece of wedding was an excellent substitute for poudre de riz, and I smoldered until I think of the substitutes we employed for rouge and lip salve.

From time to time Mr. White came down to see me, and at other times I went to New York to see him. Exactly what would have happened had I not been seized with an attack of appendicitis, I do not know. The attack was so sudden that it was necessary for the doctors who were called in to operate on me in the school, and while I was there Mr. Thaw was a frequent visitor. During the operation itself he and my mother walked up and down the garden outside discussing my future, though there seemed at that moment to be little future for me.

Mr. Thaw seemed absorbed in my welfare, so far as my health and happiness were concerned. Evelyn will never recuperate unless she goes for a voyage, he told my mother, and we must get her to Europe.

I needed little persuasion to explore the wonderful new world which was awaiting me beyond the seas. Our plans were made and we sailed, Mr. Thaw, my mother and myself, to Europe. The voyage made all the difference to me. I began to pick up health and strength the moment we sailed. Harry was most good and attentive. I began to lose the subtle sense of oppression which had weighed on me during the months I was at school. The influence of Stanford White grew milder; a new life was opening before me. Harry had proposed to me before we sailed. I think he proposed twice, but on both occasions I had refused him. I realized I could not marry any man unless he knew everything there was to be known about me. This was a matter of common honesty, and I take no credit for desiring to be frank and above board with my future husband. For the moment I had no wish to tell him. I was quite happy in the enjoyment of the present, quite willing to let the past slip from memory and the future take care of itself.

Some women have a conscience, some have a sense of self-preservation; they frequently exist together, but most often one does duty for the other. Conscience is an uneasy desire for frank dealing, and I suppose it was a suppressed conscience which made me sweep aside what would have been a very advantageous offer. Had Thaw been any other kind of man he might have been satisfied to let matters slide, to take such happiness as the gods gave him in the way their chosen instruments chose to offer it.

I Tell Harry About Stanford White.

But he was, as I say, persistent. He wanted to marry. Nothing else, nothing less would satisfy him. We were the best of friends in London, though it was in London that I first had some idea of his perversity. A brutal assault committed upon a boy at one of the leading hotels, a forgery which was unjustifiable and wicked, almost ruined Harry, and it cost him $5,000 to square the matter. The story as I have heard it was that Harry put a lot of money upon a table and watched behind a screen what a boy who had been summoned to the room came in. The completion of the money was irresistible, and the boy took two gold coins. Immediately Harry pounded his fist on the table, and a bathroom and foghorn him so terribly that the poor child had to go home. A doctor was called in, and eventually a lawyer. There can be no doubt that Harry's object in laying a trap for a boy who had shown no disposition to steal was to administer a forgery--a practise which in some way seemed to gratify him. "Contrast this side of his character with the side of him which followed when mother had gone back to America and Harry and I were alone in Paris. He came into my suite one night. He said he wanted to speak to me. I thought he looked haggard and worried, and I closed the door and invited him in.

Without any preliminary he came to the point.

"I want you to marry me," he said.

He was as dogged and as persistent as ever. There was no fending him off with excuses, with reasons or with expostulations as to why marriage was not desirable. He was in an instant that now he must know the truth, must take his answer for good or evil.

"I cannot marry you," I said.

"Why not?"

"Because--"

"Do you not love me?"

I nodded.

"Then why?" he repeated.

"Because--"

He looked toward me and laid his hand on my shoulder, looking straight into my eyes.

"Is it because of Stanford White?" he asked, and I nodded again.

He hesitated a moment.

"Sit down over there and I will tell you everything."

It was a story that was difficult to tell. But it had to be told. Very slowly, very deliberately, making no excuse for myself, giving no place to prejudices against White, I told him all that had happened from the beginning.

His seat in silence for a while his hands shaking, his face ghastly, then he rose and walked up and down the room, his shaking hands gesticulating as he muttered.

Then when I reached the climax of the story he sat down suddenly, burying his face in his hands, and burst into tears.

You saw all that was best in Harry Thaw then, all the finer side of him, all the womanliness in him, all the Quixote that was in his composition.

He sat there sobbing "Poor child! poor child!"

The relationship between Mr. Thaw and myself at that time was one of complete sympathy. There had been some unpleasantness in London. Mother had returned to the States as a result of a disagreement, and Mr. Thaw, who saw ancient causes in every whim and armistice in every flock of sheep, was prepared to repudiate the suggestion that he had kidnapped me.

Here is a letter he wrote to me that he had kidnapped me by daughter. Before she lands she will know that I have done the best I could. That he had the most extraordinary ideas may be gathered from one extract: "Telephone Mrs. Neeble," he instructs, "but not in your own name, and ask her if she saw Thaw abroad, as soon as she answers hang up the receiver."

It was here that he adopted the role of reformer. He began writing letters to the vigilance societies, exposing White. You might think very well, indeed, of Harry Thaw, his generosity, his boyish enthusiasm for the cause he had suddenly espoused, and there is no reason why he should not have all the credit that is due him for his impressive championing of righteousness, but it has to be remembered that Thaw himself was something of a degenerate. Of his fogging propensities I need not say a word. He was given to practices which are not pleasant to relate. On one occasion, as it was told, he had strapped himself by pouring boiling hot water over a girl in a bath, and on another he had flogged a young girl who had been turned to a bedpost. Such a mixture of good and evil could hardly be found without mental derangement. My own view is that at that time the melancholia which dominated him had begun to take firm hold.

I sailed to New York before him, with my marriage practically arranged for, and he followed a short time after.

All this time Harry was in correspondence with his mother. She was in many ways a remarkable woman, and enjoyed the confidence of her children. He told her of my every secret, and was not inclined to accept any advice which might be offered.

The New Infant Food Found in Milk

How to FEED CHILDREN to Keep Them from STARVING

By MRS. ADA S. BALLIN,
Dietetic Expert and Editor of "Baby: The Mothers' Magazine," London.

THAT parents require common sense in the feeding of their children is best exemplified by the tragic death of a two-year-old boy named Stanley Bert Turner, of Somersham, Huntingdonshire. He died under such peculiar circumstances that a coroner summoned a jury to inquire into the cause of death, and from the evidence of the parents it appeared that this infant, only two years of age, had been given for breakfast fried eggs, for luncheon, Yorkshire pudding, tea, bread and butter, for dinner, warm milk and cheese, for supper, roast pork and beer. The jury returned a verdict that the child came to his death from "indigestion feeding," but the popular verdict was that it was a case of murder through criminal ignorance.

A mixed diet is required by children. Parents insist upon a sameness in their children's meals that they would never tolerate in their own. Animal food should not be given too frequently at first, but an active child of four years or upward may have it once a day. One of the first forms of animal food that may be given to children is beef juice, which, with a little seasoning, may be given from a few months old. If the infant seems insufficiently nourished, raw beef juice is most valuable for young and weakly children. It can be made quite easily by cutting up a pound of ramp steak, just covering it with water and leaving it to stand for eight hours. By that time it will be seen that the fluid is quite well colored, and the fibres of the meat perfectly white. It should be made fresh every eight hours, and may be given in teaspoonful doses to children under six months, and increased later.

Raw beef pulp is very useful in cases of scurvy-riekets and rickets, and may be prepared as follows: Cut a loin beefsteak into the finest possible pieces, and free it from all fat particles; then put into a mortar, and pound until the meat becomes pulpy; next rub through a sieve and season with salt. Teaspoonful of this pulp three or four times a day will be sufficient for a child a year old. See how it agrees with the child and regulate the amount given accordingly.

When baby lies well on with cutting his teeth at about fifteen or sixteen months, he may have eggs cooked in different ways and light farinaceous puddings, custard and the like. To help in forming the teeth, and especially when the bones seem a little weak, food such as hominy, rice and oatmeal porridge, which is of great value, may be sweetened with malt extract which should always be used if sugar disagrees. The disease which this contains helps to digest starch, and it contains both flesh and bone-forming and heat-giving material. Children like it very much and grow fat upon it. It is a very good plan to spread it on their bread instead of butter. For dinner at about sixteen months of age a little boiled white fish, such as haddock or cod, carefully picked over so as to be free from bones, and the flakes well shredded so as to be easily digested, may be given with a mealy potato squeezed from the important food, no less than 75 out of 100 parts of the blood being water. Water is, of course, contained in all articles of food, but I think parents need not be so afraid as they sometimes seem to be of allowing their children to take it for itself.

Dinner should consist of meat, bread, vegetables and fruit, or fruit pudding; sweet pudding with brown sugar or animal porridge, or bread and milk; both at breakfast for a drink. At breakfast, fish, or an egg, or marmalade, or stewed fruit, should be given as a change from milk and water, or bread and marmalade, or meat and tea, the drink should be milk only, cold or warm, or diluted with water and sweetened to taste. For tea bread and butter or bread and marmalade, or toast, with perhaps a little stewed fruit for a change. If supper is required, plain crackers, bread and butter, with milk and water, or bread and milk may be given.

The craving for sugar in children is a natural and wholesome one. Physiologists have proved that both sugar and fatty matters are oxidized in the body—or, I might say, burnt up—during this process heat is evolved. Now, the child, just as much as its lover sugar, abhors fat, and it is only reasonable to suppose that the childish system demands more sugar first, because it loses more heat than the adult, and, secondly, because it cannot deal with fat. Looking at the matter from this point of view we see how wrong are those people who object to give their children sweet things which the adult does not very much care for, while trying to force them to eat fat for which they have a supreme disgust. People are apt also to give their children little or no fruit. They have not the slightest objection to giving them mercury (calomel) or other irritating purgatives, but they deny them what will prevent the evil they desire to cure. Green vegetables and fruit are a welcome addition to baby's dinner; secondly, food which is disagreeable is likely to cause indigestion; and thirdly, there may be some organic idiosyncrasy which renders that food obnoxious to the system. There is a case on record of a man on whom mutton seemed to act as a kind of irritant poison, and similar cases are not rare.

On the other hand if a child has a strong desire for one kind of food, it is unwise to deny it, unless you can show a very good reason for so doing, when you should tell the child that reason as simply as possible; as, for instance, "No, dear, that will give you a pain in your stomach or make you sick." Never be misled into saying: "Such things are not good for little girls and boys;" for children do not see why grown-up people should have the good things which they are forbidden. If, however, you give a reason which at once appeals to their own experience of the order of nature, they are ready to recognize it as a sound one.

Children when they are much out of doors and very active, as all children should be, require very much more food, and more nourishing food, than when they are confined to the house and sit about a great deal. Hence, if a child is kept indoors by some slight indisposition, it should not, as a rule, be pressed to eat. There is any disinclination for food, as that disinclination generally arises from the fact that food, for the time being, is not required; and if under these circumstances the child is encouraged to eat by the offer of dainties, a great deal more harm than good is done. Many a slight indisposition is made a grave one by the tendency parents have to stuff their children with food as a remedy for ill.

If a child is constitutionally feverish and excitable, its diet should be unstimulating, and consist mainly of milk, farinaceous, and vegetable food. If, on the other hand, it is dull and lymphatic, disinclined to activity and with cold extremities, its food should be as stimulating as possible, mainly animal. In this condition, too, coffee may be given with breakfast and tea at tea time; and in extreme cases a little wine may be allowed at dinner. By means of careful dieting much may be done to influence for good constitutional states of the system.

If You Have BLUE BLOOD--See a DOCTOR

THE host of "blue blood" is an old one, especially among the R. P. V's. (First Families of Virginia), but the explanation of the term is not by any means clear. It is supposed that the term "blue blood" was applied especially to those women of refinement and delicately translucent skin, through which the blue blood in the veins appeared, this being esteemed a mark of high breeding and ancestry.

To the scientist "blue blood" means something very different. The blood in the arteries should be of a bright red color, and only after it has passed through the system and the oxygen has been extracted by the lymphatics, the nourishment of the tissues, does the blood appear blue as it courses through the veins, on its way back to the lungs for renewing the needed oxygen.

When the physician wishes to test the blood, he draws it either from the wrist or from the lobe of the ear, because this is arterial blood and best shows how rich or poor the blood is in red corpuscles. If it is an ignorant practitioner, and there are one or two of these) he may draw the blood from the tips of the fingers, and the arteries connect directly with the veins, without any intervening capillaries, and the red of the blood here would be very unscientific. But here, too, is another proof that the term "blue blood" has reference to the appearance of the veins, blue through the thin skin of the fingers. If it is also a phrase in common usage: "she is a lady to blue of her fingers."

Those who examine the blood are very careful to note its color with the naked eye as it is drawn from the wrist or ear lobe, for its various shading from red to dark blue indicate to the expert much concerning the state of the patient's system. If it be dark blue in color this is a certain indication that gases are accumulating in the intestinal tube or elsewhere, and that decomposition and putrefactive processes are going on somewhere in the system.

If the drop of blood drawn at the proper spot is deep crimson in color, it is an indication of excessive oxygenation, or more probably too thin blood, proving that the patient is suffering from leucemia, or often that tuberculosis has attacked this system. Tests of the blood should be made several times, because changing conditions may show a flow of blue blood, for instance, may be only temporary, an account of a momentary clogging of the system with the consequent putrefaction processes.

Dr. Robert L. Watkins has called special attention to the relation of this admixture of the blood as to color, for diagnosing diseases, holding that it is a simple and valuable source of information. He has found that the blood is always blue in cases of scurvy, typhoid fever, and various forms of influenza, stasis, gangrene, erysipelas, apoplexy and paralysis. In pneumonia poisoning and into-intoxication the blood is very distinct, and is of great value because it may be seen at once and the physician need not wait to go to his laboratory and microscope.

It has been found that in diabetes the blood is generally red, or even scarlet, and also in acute tuberculosis, while in the later stages of tuberculosis the blood is blue. The physical explanation of red blood and blue is plain to the physician, for he knows that all the blood in the body passes through the lungs once every minute, carrying with it the carbonic acid gas, which has taken up from the lymphatics at it hurried through the system and that when it reaches the lungs the carbonic acid is thrown off and replaced by the oxygen taken from the air, thus restoring the redness to the blood which the heart is to pump through the body once more.

The appearance of blueness in the veins, if your skin is transparent, is perfectly normal, but nothing to be especially proud of, for every healthy person can boast the same "blue blood," but if the blood is blue when drawn from an artery, then the system is deranged and the time should be wasted in consulting the most expert physician, for something is radically wrong.

THE next worst thing to a toothache is going to the dentist, for most of us, but these days of terrible anticipation of horror are past, if the latest approved methods are used. Not only can the dentist make the extraction of a tooth painless by using cocaine or some other nerve-deadener around the roots of the tooth, but he can perform the far more nerve-racking operation of grinding out a cavity and filling a tooth without the patient suffering the least inconvenience or pain.

The magical means of securing absolutely painless dentistry is nothing else than the administering of a mixture of nitrous oxide and oxygen by inhalation through the nose, while the mouth remains open for the dentist to do all the work he finds necessary. By the latest method of administering this mixture of gases the patient remains fully conscious, sees the dentist at work and knows what he is doing, but cannot feel a single twinge of pain.

Why NICOTINE Means TOBACCO

WHISKIPPERS at the shrine of "My Lady Nicotine" and how many millions burn incense before her altar—are not all aware of the true origin of the word nicotine, or of the correct cause of the awakening to the value of tobacco on the Continent of Europe. Most of us are satisfied with the statement that Sir Walter Raleigh introduced the "weed" into England, and suppose that it spread thence all over Europe simply for smoking purposes.

If we go back to an old Black Letter volume dating from the year 1577 we get a clearer view of the subject and interesting light on the origin of the word nicotine as applied to the chief element in tobacco. According to this venerable authority, now more than three hundred years old, Master John Nicot, Counselor to the King, being Ambassador for the King in Portugal, in the year of our Lord 1559, '60, '61, went one day to see the prisons of the King of Portugal, and a gentleman being the keeper of the said prisons presented him a herb, as a strange plant brought from Florida.

This same Master Nicot, having caused the said herb to be set in his garden, where it grew and multiplied marvelously, was upon a time advised by one of his pages that a young man, some kin to that page, made a plaster of that herb bruised, both the herb and the juice together, upon an ulcer, which he had upon his cheek near his nose, coming of a mole tanger, which had taken root already at the base of the nose, and that he found himself much easier at one. Therefore the said Master Nicot caused the sick young man to be brought before him, causing the said herb to be applied to the sore eight or ten days, until it was completely cured and healed. And he had it sent while this cure was working to a certain physician of the King of Portugal, the most famous in his time, to see the further working and effect of the said young man. He then sent for the same young man at the end of the ten days, and brought him before this physician, that he might see how the herb had acted upon the sore, and he certified that the said noli me tangere was indeed utterly obliterated, and indeed it never returned afterwards.

Some time after this one of the Ambassador's cooks, having almost cut off his thumb with a big chopping knife, the steward of the house of this gentleman ran to the said Nicotiano and dressed his thumb therewith five or six times, and it was finally thoroughly healed thereby. From that time on this herb was famous throughout all Lisbon, where the Court of the King of Portugal was held at that time, and the virtue of this herb was announced far and wide, and the people called it "the ambassador's herb."

The London Ambassador, seeing that such beneficial effects were produced by this herb, and having heard that the Lady Montigny that was had died at Saint Germain of an ulcer on the breast, which had turned into a noli me tangere, for which no remedy was known at that time, and that the Countess of Ruffe had consulted all the famous physicians of that realm to help to heal her face, but that none of them had found any remedy, he thought it wise to communicate his good news to France; and, therefore, sent to King Francis II. and to the Queen Mother, telling them all about tobacco and how to use it, as well as how to apply it to this dread disease, as had been proved by experience.

In this way we have evidence that tobacco was considered the cure for ulcers caused by cancerous growths, more than for smoking, and in this way the word nicotine is to be traced to this Ambassador, John Nicot.

"Master Nicot used a plaster made of bruised tobacco leaves to heal ulcers and troublesome wounds."

To Take GREASE SPOTS Out of WALL PAPER

GREASE spots, no matter how tiny, seriously deface wall paper, be it ever so handsome, and should be by every possible precaution avoided. Two classes of persons are responsible for the defacement, little children who run their fingers across the walls between bits of bread and butter, and their elders, women an essential part of whose night toilet is to anoint their faces and hands with cold cream or olive oil, and, who, during their slumbers, touch the walls with their palms. The women are the greater offenders, for all women use cold cream, and few children can be kept away from the walls during a meal.

One effective preventive of the tattoo of grease stains on the wall of a bedroom is to move the bed out of arms reach from the wall. Another is to wear old kid or rubber gloves after giving the hands their cold cream or oil bath.

But if the wall paper has been thus defaced three remedies await. One is to place a piece of blotting paper over the spot and, pressing a hot iron against it, attempt to draw the grease from the wall paper into the blotting paper. This must be deftly done to accomplish the result. It is well if one person holds the blotting paper, a large piece of it, over the spot and another presses the iron over it, turning it round and round, and repeating the process until so that the work be thoroughly done and no rim of the grease remains, leaving an ugly circle.

Should this fail, or if it be inconvenient, as in the case of hotel apartment dwellers, or lodgers in studios or furnished rooms, you may resort to naphtha or gasoline. Do the work by day as both of these cleaning agents are highly combustible. Dip a sponge or flannel cloth into either one and rub it briskly but lightly over the spot, preferably with a circular motion. Change the cloth or sponges as soon as it is soiled otherwise the dirt will be rubbed into the paper and a bad matter be made worse.

Still another way to take grease-spots out of wall-paper, particularly those made by the fingers, is to rub the soiled area gently with a stiff dough made of flour and water. Very often a stain will not yield to one of these methods will give way to another.

Restoring Ivory Handles.

THE Ivory handles of cutlery can be restored to their original whiteness by rubbing them with turpentine.

The Right Care for a Sponge.

TO keep a sponge in good condition you should wash occasionally in warm water with a little tartaric acid added, afterward rinsing it in clean water.

Giving the Children Medicine.

PLACE the point of the spoon containing the medicine against the roof of the mouth. Administered in this way it will be impossible for the child to choke or eject the medicine.

For Nose Bleed.

TO stop nose-bleed, sit upright, bathe the neck and face with cold water and snuff up the nostrils water in which a little alum has been dissolved.

Washing Colored Clothes.

WHEN washing colored clothes add a little vinegar and a handful of salt to the water to brighten the colors and prevent their running.

For a Smoky Chimney.

WHEN a chimney smokes open the window of the room for ten minutes before the fire is lighted, and not at the time, as is generally done.

Saving Gas.

IF you want to heat a flat iron in your room, a tin plate over the gas jet will enable you to heat the iron twice as quickly.

FEW people ever expected to hear of streets paved with gold this side of heaven, but away out in the little village of Axim, on the Gold Coast of Africa, the streets are actually paved with the precious metal.

Of course the paving is nature's own soil. The streets are not actually covered with blocks of refined gold, but the soil that makes the surface of these streets is so rich in gold that a person can wash out a dollar's worth of it in an hour's work, providing he is expert in the art of twisting pans of water-soaked soil about until the pure gold dust is separated.

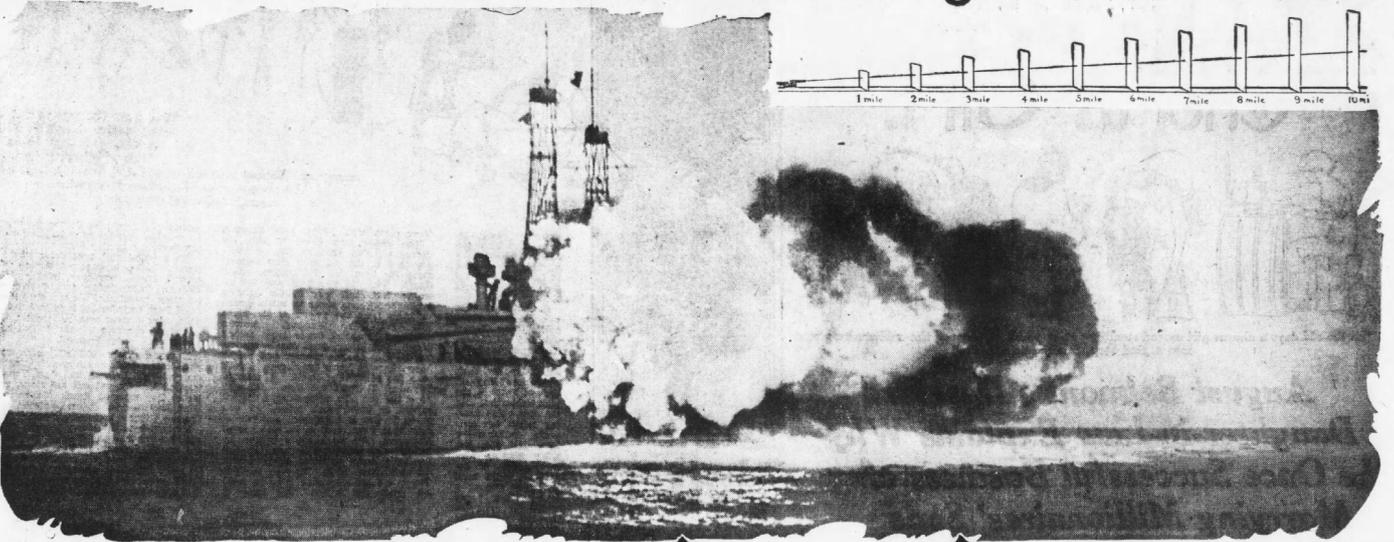

An Englishman was visiting in this town not long ago when his host mentioned that the street running past his bungalow was an expert in the art of twisting pans. He thought it a mere figure of speech, but the host called a woman servant, a native, and told her to wash out some gold.

This woman took a tin bucket and filled it with the loose soil scraped from the surface of the road. With this and a number of pans and plenty of water began to wash the "pay dirt." From pan to pan she washed the dirt until most of it was washed away as refuse, and then in the last pan she completed the work, and because the results would not justify the expense incident to mining it. When the process of gold-mining becomes cheap the gold supply will be greatly increased as a result of the tremendous gold-containing areas which will become workable at a profit.

In our own country there are numerous localities where gold is known to exist, but no one bothers with it because the results would not justify the expense incident to mining it. When the process of gold-mining becomes cheap the gold supply will be greatly increased as a result of the tremendous gold-containing areas which will become workable at a profit.

How We Smashed the World's Big Gun Record

One of the Most Remarkable Photographs Ever Taken, Showing the Dreadnought Arkansas Firing a Broadside of Big Guns During the Recent Target Practice Off the Virginia Capes, in which the World's Big Gun Record Was Made. The Diagram Shows Why the Record, which Was Made On a Small Target at One Mile, Was as Good as if It Had Been Made at Ten Miles on the Larger Targets Used for Longer Ranges.

THREE years ago the gunners on board the battleship New Hampshire fired four twelve-inch shells at a moving target six miles distant and scored four hits. This feat was accomplished in one minute and thirty-six seconds. The achievement was regarded as phenomenal. It broke all previous records of our own gunners, and no foreign gunner ever came anywhere near such a score.

A few weeks ago, during elementary target practice off the Virginia capes, the gunners on the dreadnought Arkansas made an even more remarkable record. Firing at a moving target only twelve feet high and twenty-one feet wide, the target moved at the rate of five knots and the battleship at ten knots, one of the big twelve-inch guns fired six shots in fifty-seven seconds and scored six hits!

While the range was only a little over a mile in contrast to the range of six miles in the case of the New Hampshire's previous record, the target was proportionately smaller, and the achievement of the Arkansas' gunners is therefore regarded as clearly establishing the world's record for rapid deepsea big gun firing at a moving target.

The full significance of this feat will be better understood when it is remembered that the test was started with the gun unloaded. At a given signal shell and charge were brought from below and served to the gunners in the turret; the guns were served and trained on the target, and when the range was determined and the psychological moment for the discharge of the gun arrived the word to fire was given and the first shell was sent crashing at the moving target over a mile away.

Almost before it reached its goal, the big gun, still reverberating from the shock of the last discharge, was loaded again with a fresh charge of powder and shell, again the distance of the target, the velocity of the wind and the various other factors upon which accurate shooting depends were determined and the word to fire was given a second time. Again the shell sped true and found its mark. Five times this feat was repeated, and the total time which elapsed from the moment the gun was supplied with its ammunition for the first shot until the sixth shot was fired was less than a minute to be exact, fifty-seven seconds!

Such rapid work as that would, of course, have been out of the question but for the perfect team work of the gunners in the turret. Not only the gunners but every man on board our battleships. Not only the gunners but every man on board our battleships. Not only the gunners but every man on board our battleships.

This Is the Target, Only Twelve Feet High and Twenty-one Feet Wide, Which Was Struck Six Times in Fifty-seven Seconds by Six Shells Fired from a Single Twelve-inch Gun. The Remarkable Feature About This Feat Was That the Target Was Moving at the Rate of Five Knots and the Arkansas at the Rate of Ten Knots When the Shots Were Fired.

but such computations are rarely settled. For the purpose of target practice special shells, known as "blind" shells, are used. A regular twelve-inch shell costs from $225 to $250, and a full charge of powder to fire it costs about $200. But the special shell used for target practice costs only $36 and the powder used to send the shell a distance of a mile or so costs only a little more than $100. To establish the world's record cost, the Arkansas, by actual computation, just $366.

The powder used for these tests, while perfectly good for immediate use, is of the kind which has about lived its life and which would, within a few months, so deteriorate as to become worthless.

Why Twins Grow Faster and Better

RECENT scientific investigations seem to establish the fact that twins or triplets brought up together will each grow faster and better than one child brought up alone.

In the case of various small animals with which interesting experiments have been made it has been found that they grow much more rapidly when not kept separate. One investigator believes this may be due to the fact that two or more little animals, existing close together, do not have to develop so much bodily heat as if they were kept alone, and are therefore able to turn more of the energy value of their food into growth.

Another theory is that the faster growth is not a matter of heat, but simply due to the fact that animals brought up together are less restless, sleep better and are more comfortable generally.

As one scientist points out, the crowding theory would hardly apply to twins or triplets brought up in houses where their bodies are kept at a proper temperature by artificial means.

How Wealth Oppresses the Unselfish Chorus Girl.

"In the old days a chorus girl moved steadily out of want by way of the millionaire's son into a glad step, family and wealth."

Mrs. Raymond Belmont, Who Says There Is No Future Now for the Chorus Girl Except the Chorus.

August Belmont's Deserted Daughter-in-Law Explains Why the Once Successful Business of Marrying Millionaires' Sons Has Fallen Into Decline

MRS. RAYMOND BELMONT is the charming chorus girl who married the son of August Belmont, the distinguished financier and race-track man. Her maiden name was Ethel Lorraine. Miss Lorraine's wedded happiness was of exceedingly brief duration, for after six days her young husband wandered forth into the night and fell into the hands of his furious father's agents.

At least a score of lonely days and nights young Mrs. Belmont waited for the coming of the bridegroom, but alas, he never returned. At last hope melted into despair, and all her love was changed to wonderment. Young Mrs. Belmont, in fact, realized that she was up against it. The miserable pittance that her multi-millionaire father-in-law later offered her to heal the heart broken by its cherished inmate's rude departure only served to increase the young wife's sorrow.

But during the time she listened for the step that never returned, young Mrs. Belmont studied the unusual phenomena of which she was a part. Why had Raymond left her? Why had he stayed away? Why had cruel papa-in-law acted as he did? What was it that could prove stronger than Raymond's love? In a sentence, just why had she been handed such a lemon? She came at last to some vastly original conclusions. And here she gives them, as a warning, not only for other gulleible, unselfish, money-despising chorus girls, but for any other trusting maids who, poor but honest, find their hearts lured away from them by a princeling of the Court of Mammon.

THERE is something wrong with the world, and I know what it is. It's money! We poor chorus girls are finding this out to our undoing. For the power of money is the juggernaut that is crushing our happiness, breaking our hearts, and ruining our lives. Why, it is getting so that pretty soon none of us will dare to marry for love.

Belmont loves money, and the son fears he can't care for me.

It was not like this in the olden days. Money was newer and it did not mean so much to its possessors as it does now. Money got to be a habit. It has taken about thirty years for it to get strong enough to absorb all the human feeling out of our American fathers.

Just look at the difference thirty years ago. When a man got a lot of money he put all kinds of gasoline wagons. The unfortunate thing is that the chorus girl has changed, too. I won't say that in the old days they married more for love than for money. They didn't. The life was hard and the rewards few, and when little Johnnie Millionbucks came along we saw a chance to jump from the prison of the stage into gold-plated freedom. Avarice swamped love and Cupid took second place. But in the past decade our rewards have become greater and we no longer have to marry for money. I don't expect to have much money. I was ready to live in a different and plainer style than I was used to because I loved Raymond. We were going to live far from Broadway, in the country. We had our little house of seven rooms picked out at Madison, N. J. We were going to live on a small allowance, what he could get from his father. We knew it wouldn't be much, for Raymond's pop is no spender. We intended to eke out the allowance by raising dogs.

We married and everything went to smash. Things have come to smash with several stage marriages lately. Lilly Killee and Gabrielle Ray, two of the greatest stage beauties of London, each separated from their husbands in less than a year. Mae Murray was, apparently, the last of the chorus contingent to find happiness with a rich husband.

It wasn't so when Edith Kingdon married George Gould and Agnes Huntington married Paul Cravath and Cora Tanner married happily and left the stage, and Isabel Cow married Frank McKee and Edna May married Oscar Lewisohn and Frances Belmont annexed her belted earl.

My advice to the merry merries is to give the rich man and the rich man's son the go by. Marry an honest working man or a self-made rich man, whose family can't interfere, or marry a burglar. You'll be happier than as the not wanted in a purse-worshipping family.

"But now she moves out of comparative comfort into trouble, sees her living husband kidnapped by a money-mad father and has to go back to want, because the chorus union disciplines those who commit indiscreet matrimony."

Young Mr. Raymond Belmont, Who Forsook His Bride After 8 Days of Bliss.

Withhold your harsh and cruel judgment. Once chorus girls may have loved money instead of millionaires and married millionaires to get it, but times have changed. The chorus girl nowadays has to be a rube indeed who can't live in beautiful independence by her art. With that improvement in her circumstances she finds time to trust love. She doesn't have to look upon a man as a meal ticket and a free pass on the of jig-saw patterns on his house and stuck iron stags and dogs and things like that around his lawn. He did not do much traveling. The family stayed home and admired what they had.

Look at the kind of plays that they had then. "Lola, the Plumber's Daughter," "The Beggar Girl's Lover," etc., etc. Every one of those dramas of poor girls marrying into affluence and becoming one of the family. But they don't have

How We Breathe the Pins and Needles We Lose and Become Strong

THE mystery of what becomes of the pins we lose has been solved by a chemist, Dr. Johann Schildkraft, in his laboratory, has daily watched the so-called disappearance of the pin and has read this riddle of common life. "What becomes of lost pins?"

Dr. Schildkraft has announced that the pins we lose we do not in fact lose. Differently phrased, he asserts that the loss of a pin is our gain in quality and quantity of life giving air.

The first step in the loss of a pin, he says, is that it falls to the floor or ground, is hidden in some secluded corner of a closet, or buries itself in a neglected gown. Within twenty-four hours the second stage in the loss of a pin begins. It begins to rust.

Rust rapidly devours any metal object. In ordinarily damp surroundings in a week a pin has been "eaten" half way through with rust. By the end of a fortnight it "breaks" for it has literally been eaten through. If it has been bent the process may be accomplished in ten days at least. In three weeks, or at most a month, there is no more pin. It has rusted itself out of existence, or at least tangible existence, for the particles of rust have been taken up in the air.

Rust, according to old housewives' proverbs, is a healthful element. At last old housewives and science agree. Science says the housekeepers' habit of placing rusty nails in a cat's drinking vessel to furnish iron to strengthen and invigorate its constitution is sound. When a person is pale and bloodless looking physicians order iron in some form to rebuild his constitution. The iron forms new corpuscles, which have been too few in the blood of the anemic person. Iron so often disturbs the digestion, if taken directly into the stomach, that some physicians order it injected into the circulation by means of a hypodermic syringe. If it can be taken into the system in large quantities through the air so much the better. That is the humble function of the lost pin.

When you drop three or four pins while hastily dressing, don't scramble to pick them up. If a wire hair pin falls from your head do not replace it. It is a hat pin vanishes from your hat, do not seek for it. But buy a new one. Leave it to go back to mother earth in the form of rust, for within a few weeks it will return to you as energy-making iron in the air.
